FOREWORD.

The unusual feature of the Jain philosophy is its precise and scientific treatment of the law of Karma. In fact, the superiority of the Jain seers and the absolute reasonableness of their way of thinking are apparent to any non-Jain student of this branch of the Jain philosophy. The whole study is scientifically based and is treated both by analysis and synthesis. Fortunately for the Jains, the synopsis in English of this valued science was written by the able hand of late Mr Virchand Raghavji Gandhi so far as it goes it is faultless. It often happens that the Jain works are edited by scholars who have scant knowledge of the subject and much misunderstanding of the Jain doctrines results. It is also gratifying to note that the book is published by such a respectable institution as Shree Jain Agamodaya Samiti whose services as the publishers of some of Jain scriptures and other very valuable works of Jain literature cannot be forgotten by the Jain community.

It is also satisfactory to note that the Samiti sells books at half its cost price, so that even the poorest can get the advantage of possessing a copy.

The law of Karma is a universal law, the law that applies to every creature not only on the earth but in the universe. This law applies even to the gods.

The Karma denotes action. Action denotes progress. This progress may be two-fold. The progress that helps

The realization of one's self and the progress that divides
 Time apart Time karmas which are species of matter adhere to the soul and as long as they last there the freedom of the soul the salvation cannot be attained
 The evolution of worldly works rests in being free from karmas as far as possible soul is by nature free, full of knowledge and power The rays of its knowledge and power is obstructed by these karmas The greatest obstacle of man should be to remove them karmas
 The ways to remove and the nature and qualities of karmas are ably described in the book.

When a man understands this law he does not wonder at the uneven inequalities and is always on the safeguard to protect himself from further karmas as far as he possibly can In the Jain literature there are numerous important works which so've deal with this subject e. g. karmas grantha 501 and new edition of karmas grantha, karmas prakriti Parichaya sangraha and others Besides these are numerous references in sacred books as well as other literature where this subject is either scientifically touched or is illustrated The story almost always is designed to illustrate the karma theory This is a very interesting To do justice to it a life long study in light of the greater world literature is a necessity So one can not expect to find from this small book anything but rudiments of this subject karmas are to be looked at from the six aspects of their quality quantity, duration density and a number of others which are too numerous to mention here I can not end this foreword without mentioning some one Jain or Indian or European non-Jain scholar to devote his life to this subject and bring out an exhaustive and considered work on the subject in English which will be a real boon not only to the Jain community but to all seekers after truth who are taking lively interest in such subjects specially as the theory of Karma in all its different aspects is as yet considered only in the Jain Philosophy and in none else. The undersigned will be happy to help one who will undertake such work both by suggestions as well as books as far as practicable. Unfortunately this is a subject to which the attention of scholars is not drawn to the extent it deserves.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION

I did not expect at the time when I first thought of bringing out the speeches and writings of the Late Mr V R Gandhi B A that they would furnish material for as many as more than three volumes. These were supplied to me by Mr Umarosing Tank B A, LL B, of Delhi the late Mr Virchand Ditchand C I E and Mr Maneklal Ghelabhai of Bombay for which I am deeply thankful to them. As a result the first volume entitled 'The Jain Philosophy' was published by me in the year 1911. After its publication, the trustees of the Seth Devchand Lalbhai Jain Pustakoddhar Fund were pleased to include 'Yoga Philosophy' the embodiment of the rest of my collected materials, in their series which was published by them last year. These two publications were welcomed by Western scholars and readers who took interest in the Jain theology and literature which was a matter of great satisfaction to me. When "Yoga Philosophy" was published I was in the dark if there were any further speeches and writings of Mr Gandhi. However the materials embodied in this volume were supplied by Mr H Warren of London, which are on the Karma Philosophy.

The Jains of all shades of opinion believe in the law of Karma to which every soul that is not yet emancipated is subject. What that Law is and how by it the soul or atma is governed is explained in brief in the following pages. In the absence of an exhaustive work specially dealing with kaṁya as it is understood by the Jains, this volume would be of immense use to the students of Jainism. No vivid and real ideas of Jainism can be formed without a thorough conception of the law of kaṁya.

In my preface to the Yoga Philosophy, I have alluded to the deficiency of literature on Jainism in Western languages. There is however no lack here of Indian vernaculars in general. Weal that those whose duty it is to secure the permanence of the faith awake to this necessity. The times and circumstances are altered and the attitude of the followers of the faith should also be altered at least proportionately, in conformity with the needs of the situation. There should come into existence a class of Jain scholars and translators who may well carry out this object. This however will continue to remain only a poor wish until the number of characters is seriously changed.

In conclusion I am thankful to the Shri of the temple for including the book in their series.

INTRODUCTION

Jain literature comprising as it does almost all the branches that are characteristic of ancient Indian literature, holds no insignificant niche in the gallery of that literature. It is considerable even as it is at present, and was more so in former times. This is not the proper place to enumerate the great writers and their works that constitute the glory of that literature. The fact that the Jain writers had flourished in great abundance in times gone by is evident from the vast stock of literature that has survived to this day, though it is yet in an unexplored state. Their eminence in subject matter as well as language is manifest to those who are conversant with it.

Along with Indian literature at large, Jain literature too has been a participator in the unhappy fate it met with at the hands partly of alien bigotry, and partly of mutual religious jealousy and from the peculiarities of the climate. There was a time when there was no other alternative to secure the very existence of such literature but that of burying it in subterranean archives. The very method employed for the safety of the works became later on instrumental in further diminishing the stock, and that at a time when there was not the least chance of its being further enriched. Those upon whom had fallen the task of being the hereditary custodians how by it the soul, or spirit is governed is explained in brief in the following paper. In the absence of an exhaustive work specially dealing with Karma as it is understood by the Jains this volume would be of immense use to the students of Jainism. No vivid and real idea of Jainism can be formed without a thorough conception of the law of Karma.

In my preface to the Yoga Philosophy I have alluded to the deficiency of literature on Jainism in Western languages. This is however no excuse of Indian Vernaculars in general. Verily those whose duty it is to secure the persistence of the faith awaken to this necessity. The times and circumstances are altered and the activities of the followers of the faith should also be adapted at least preferentially in conformity with the needs of the situation. There should come into existence a class of Jain scholars and teachers, who may well carry out this object. This however will continue to remain only a poem until the method of changes is relatively changed.

In conclusion I am thankful to the Trustees of this fund for making this book in their gift.

INTRODUCTION

Jain literature comprising as it does almost all the branches that are characteristic of ancient Indian literature holds no insignificant niche in the gallery of that literature. It is considerable even as it is at present and was more so in former times. This is not the proper place to enumerate the great writers and their works that constitute the glory of that literature. The fact that the Jain writers had flourished in great abundance in times gone by is evident from the vast stock of literature that has survived to this day, though it is yet in an unexplored state. Their eminence in subject matter as well as language is manifest to those who are conversant with it.

Along with Indian literature at large, Jain literature too has been a participator in the unhappy fate it met with at the hands partly of alien bigotry, and partly of mutual religious jealousy and from the peculiarities of the climate. There was a time when there was no other alternative to secure the very existence of such literature but that of burying it in subterranean archives. The very method employed for the safety of the works became later on instrumental in further diminishing the stock, and that at a time when there was not the least chance of its being further enriched. Those upon whom had fallen the task of being the hereditary custodians of such collections, had inherited the tradition of their forefathers viz, those of not entering any part of such collection to see the rays of the sun, lest they might be deprived of them and the works were left to them be destroyed by the assailants. It is very strange indeed that these traditions are alive even at this day when there is place all round and when the time is most propitious for the development of literature. Fire even has contributed its quota to the destruction of the records. Add to these the all round degeneration among the followers of the faith when in fact the prospects of further expansion the faith was in imminent danger of being extinct. I was during the time that more attention was paid to the performance of external rites and ceremonies and practically nothing was done in the direction of education and literature and the stirring up of the inner spirit of faith. It is only very recently that a practical revival of a salutary character is visible. Owing to circumstances above mentioned the literary results of the arduous labour and the great learning of the Acharyas and the Sadhus of the faith could not be made accessible.

It may perhaps not be out of place here to give in short the history of the fund that has led to the publication of the series. The Late Shri Dinkar Lal Joshi, by whose generosity this fund has been commenced and by his will a sum of Rs. 40,000 along with other sums to be spent in various other matters has been devoted to some beneficial purpose. The account of it further enhanced by a sum of Rs 25,000 set apart by Mr Gulabchand Devchand to be spent in some good purpose in the memory of the said Sheth Devchand Lalbhai. It was at the advice of Purnas Shree Anand Sagar that these sums which made the original funds in Trust, were amalgamated, and the present Trust was inaugurated. At present the funds of this Trust amount to about Rs 100000, the original being further enhanced by the property of "Bai Viskore" the deceased daughter of the said Sheth Devchand Lalbhai, which was directed to be made over to this Trust by her. The object of this Trust is to devote the interest of the funds for the preservation and the development of "the Jain Svetamber religious literature". This is the 'thirteenth volume' of the series that is being published by this Trust.

In conclusion we have to say that this volume contains the speeches and writings of the late Mr Gandhi. We have nothing to add here about this work as enough has been said about it in the preface written by Mr B F Karbhari. We are thankful to him for having supplied us with the materials for this publication.

I was rather engaged and a little unwell too, and hence I could not till this day answer your kind note of the 5th Inst, with which you were good enough to send me as present the two works entitled "The Yoga Philosophy" & "Karma Philosophy" of the late lamented Mr Virchand Gandhi. The author was a great friend of mine and we worked together in Bombay in works of good for the people. He was a learned man, but he was a good man also. When he returned to Bombay after his successful travels, various institutions applied to him for lectures but at my instance he readily delivered his first lecture in the Budhi Vardhak Sabha, which I had then reorganized. The meeting was largely attended by educated people and by ladies too, and we all gave him a very hearty welcome. In his speech he of course spoke much about the religious knowledge he advocated, but at the end laid special stress upon the proposition, "Religion consists not in knowledge but in a holy life." KARMA.

OR

The Law of Moral Causation.

There are one or two principles which must be mentioned upon which the doctrine of Karma is based in order that it may be understood first, that this universe is not a mere congeries of substances set together and set into motion by some authority, but is a system of itself subject to laws inherent in its own constitution And such law is a proposition derived from our observation of the universe, which proposition teaches us that certain phenomena occur regularly in certain circumstances The law is therefore not a command but a formula

Second that the phenomenon of life and also of consciousness, is different not only in degree, but in kind from the phenomenon known as activity of matter (motion or vibration) In the activity of matter there is growth by addition in dead objects, subject only to chemical laws Whereas the living being takes to itself particles foreign to those that are in the body and changes their nature, and assimilates them with its own body depending when necessary chemical action, and in living beings there is the reproduction of the species. These characteristics are not possessed by dead objects. With reference to consciousness, the difference is more marked. Consciousness can never be identical with matter, they may go together and one may even be dependent upon the other but they are different. Consciousness is a synthesis, and not a sensation. It is a synthesis of perceptions and conceptions. Consciousness and life have some substance other than material substance, but still it is real substance. It is a substance which is not cognized by the senses but objects which can be known by the senses. It not exhaust the whole universe. The substance (go to work) of life and consciousness is the 'law' or atom. Consciousness is an extension by consideration of consciousness cannot be the consciousness of another. You may have another mind consciousness but you cannot have another mind consciousness. Hence each person's mind is entirely different from the individuality of another person. One atom does not become another atom.

So there are three points, (1) the universe is a system, (2) there are distinct units which can have no beginning or end, you cannot put a beginning to a unit.

It is only in order to be a unit and not be a unit. A really system is not through saying that and again. To be in order according to the law.

philosophy, would mean to stand in relation to something else, to be the cause of, to be influenced by, and to influence. Hence, because the soul is a reality (or the individual is a reality) it must have passed in the past through many conditions and states, and because it is a reality it would not entirely disappear at death but will exist and continue to exist in some state or other at all times. Every stage of existence is the result of the previous state.

The doctrine which gives us some explanation

Definition as to how certain characteristics or factors of karma of our individuality which we have at present—how these factors were produced as a resultant of forces generated in the past, this doctrine is the doctrine of karma.

Karma is according to the Jain philosophy a reality, as real as the walls around us are only the walls we see, but the karma one cannot see. There is not only one reality called karma, because karma with each person is different. Karma is that finest matter which a living being attracts to itself by reason of certain impellent forces which are in the individual not only attracted to but assimilated by the individual itself (this doctrine of karma applies not only to human, but to all living beings), and it changes the individuality of the living being. It has become a kind of stored force and just as a compressed spring of a watch will expand at some study it in reference to its intensity, and therefore the intensity with which they will manifest themselves Or we may study karma in reference to the duration It may stay for a thousand years or for five years Or in reference to its mass one may be heavy another may be light Or fifthly we may study how the karma is generated and how it manifests itself when ripe, how it can be worked out before its natural time, and incidentally though very important, how we can stop from the very beginning the inflow of karma Prevention is better than cure

From this point of view there are eight heads Karma in reference to its nature its action under which it may be classified It can be classified into eight classes. Karma is always a foreign matter it is always an obscuring element obscuring some quality of the soul, and the sooner it is worked out the better When the karma is worked out, then the quality of the soul which was obscured appears and becomes actual

The most important karma refers to the very essence of the soul or individual (and that very essence is knowledge, consciousness, cognization) So that the first kind of karma is that which obscures the knowledge

Classifications of the Karmas into 8 kinds

Class 1 Knowledge obscuring karma [अनावरणीय]

Class 2 is that karma which obscures cognition in an undifferentiated way. Cognition in an undifferentiated way, that is a general cognition (of a horse for instance) it is the first stage of all consciousness. If this first activity does not take place the soul does not know. You see a picture for instance but you do not go into the details of it, you just know in a general way that it is a picture. The Sanskrit for this general is 'darshana' [दर्शनम्]

Class 3 is that karma the result of which is the feeling of either pain or pleasure. Knowledge by itself is no pain nor pleasure but on account of certain karma in me I feel pain or pleasure. Experiencing pain or pleasure is different from the consciousness or awareness of pain or pleasure. In consciousness there is no pain or pleasure, though at the time of pain or pleasure there may be consciousness of it [वेदनीयम्]

Class 4 is that kind of karma which obstructs or acts as an obstacle to the formation of right belief and right conduct. Belief (conviction, that it is wrong to kill for instance) is different from knowledge. In the worst form of this karma, we believe that which is wrong to be right and that which is right to be wrong. A sub-division of this karma acts also as an obstacle to right conduct. The does not intend to act in it.

intend, there is no intention to act This karma is an obstacle to the very formation of an intention [मोहनीय]

Class 5 is the karma which determines the duration of any particular life period, such as the life on this planet from birth to death It is always generated in the incarnation just next before [आयु]

Class 6 is that karma which gives the living being the various factors of his objective individuality Voice colour, features, etc It makes him Mr Smith or Mr Jones his personality [नाम]

Class 7 determines the surroundings the family into which he is born whether high or low The birth into a certain family is not an accident, according to the Jain philosophy It is determined by a certain kind of karma There is really no such thing as 'accident' the word is only rightly used for those phenomena to which no explanation can be given the Jain (Sanskrit ?) word for 'accident' means 'I do not know from what it has taken place' [गोत्र]

Class 8 is the kind of karma which, like the 4th, also acts as an obstacle, but to different things, in the 4th there was no desire of acting in the right way, in this 8th there is the desire to do something good, to enjoy certain good things but still, although you have the desire, certain obstacles come in the way you cannot do it. [अन्तराय]

We must know how the karma is generated, how it is worked out before its time, how long it would stay with us, &c

Karma is generated by reason of certain impellent forces within us, and these impellent forces need to be explained—impellent forces on account of the presence of which we generate the karma

Darshana—the state where there is undifferentiated knowledge, formless knowledge, the limitations and boundaries are not fixed and you only know the thing as belonging to a class and not individualized

SECOND LECTURE

In giving the doctrine of karma, the first thing to do is to classify the phenomena and then give the theory explaining the phenomena

The function, nature or action of each class of karma is quite different

Class 1 is that karma the function of which is to obscure the knowing faculty, or to retard the development of the knowing faculty There are words and thoughts the tendency of which is to retard knowing Karma is a peculiar force which we generate and the result of which ultimately acts on our individuality In Sanskrit this class of karma is called Gnanavaraniya karma (In Sanskrit the letter 'a' is pronounced like the letter 'u' in the word 'but' And the letter 'ā' is pronounced like the letter 'a' in the word 'calm')

Class 2 is that karma which obscures the general perceiving faculty It is called Darshanavaraniya karma

Class 3 is that karma by reason of which we have feelings of pains and pleasures (Quite different from consciousness. In consciousness taken by itself there is neither pain nor pleasure (feeling is quite a distinct phenomena from consciousness). This karma is called Vedaniya karma.

Class 4 is called Mohaniya karma (Literally, intoxicating karma, that is, mental, or moral intoxication). Its nature is to infatuate our mental and moral nature in such a way that we are not able to distinguish between right and wrong.

Class 5 Ayuh karma (Literally, duration of life). It determines the duration of the life and the general nature of the life. This karma generated in this life, determines what the next incarnation or rebirth will be like and its duration (that it does not fix the number of years or months of life; it is rather 'quantity' of life than length and as water can be squeezed out of a sponge quickly or slowly, so if this ayuh is used up quickly, the life in years will be a less number than if it be used up slowly or spun out).

Class 6 Nama karma. Is that karma by reason of which we have our objective individuality. The combination of all the factors of individuality which when taken together makes us call a person Mr. X or Mrs. Y.

Class 7 Gotra karma. By reason of which the person is born into his particular social surroundings.

(When people do not know the causes of things, they say it is accident, or Divine providence, or the act of God, or some expression which amounts to saying that they do not know the cause of the phenomenon)

Class 8 Antaraya karma Literally, obstacle Its nature is to throw obstacles in our way should we want to do certain good things It is not an accident, there are certain reasons, and the philosophy explains why the person is unable to put forth the effort of the will

Karma apart from an individual is nothing, it is a factor of the individual, it is in him, apart from him it is mere matter and has nothing to do with his individuality Because that person acted in a certain way and used certain words or entertained certain thoughts with a certain object in view, he generated certain forces which became assimilated with his individuality and therefore he is influenced by it It is not a real separation, it is not a difference between the Karma and the individual it is the mode of behaviour of the individual It is not entirely separate in fact from the person who generates it

Impellent Forces, or Causes

It is not under all circumstances that a person's action or word, or thought would be the cause of the karma, it is only in certain circumstances. That is to say when the exercise of the different faculties of the person is preceded by certain impellent forces, or in other words, when by reason of certain impellent forces in him, a person says something or does something or thinks something then he generates the Karma.

These impellent forces are not the cause because the cause is the person himself. The circumstantial causes are the instrumental causes and these are his impellent forces. There are four kinds namely as follows —

1. Delusion. When a person is in that condition and does, thinks, or says something, then he generates karma. For instance, by way of illustration, when a man does not examine the belief into which he is born, as to its merits or demerits. Also doubts come under this heading. Again when a man knows or believes that his doctrines are wrong and still preaches them, he generates a bad Karma. Again, the state of delusion here meant is forced in those living beings in whom right belief does not exist, they, having formed no right or wrong beliefs, it is a state of the lack of development. Lack of development is injurious. The Sanskrit name of this first impellent force by reason of which the Karma is generated is Mithyatva (Mithya means wrong and tva means 'ness').

2 Lack of control over the senses and over the mental activities. The senses (taste, sight etc) are the channels of acquiring knowledge and the indulging of the senses does not bring consciousness but stops it. You not go further in thought about it. And if you have lack of control over the mental activity, when it is injurious to other people, when you do not or cannot stop injurious thoughts about another person, you generate a Karma. The uncontrolled thought activity is the impellent force for the generation of Karma. (The lecturer did not say, but I conclude that a tune persisting in the head against our will is an illustration very easy to recognize.) The name of this impellent force is Akrati.

4 Yoga. The word yoga has many meanings but here it has a technical sense, and means all other activities of body, mind, and speech which are not included in the first three forces mentioned, and it is therefore a general name. So that certain karmas are generated by reason of the physiological activities. If a person is suffering from dyspepsia, he perhaps loses his temper. Here is karma generated at once and manifested at once. We do sometimes generate the Karma even now and have the result the next moment. We are, as a matter of fact, generating karma every moment. (This was said by the lecturer but might be misleading, because we can stop the inflow and we can work out all the karmas and finally become a liberated soul, which will appear later on.)

The impellent force is called in Sanskrit Hetu. It signifies 'the means by which', the instrumental cause.

The Karmas

We have had eight classes of Karmas mentioned, with a rough description of their nature or function, and four kinds of causes or impellent forces which are the means of generating the Karmas. We now come again to the eight classes of Karmas.

Class 1 Knowledge obscuring karma. Certain acts and words and thoughts have the tendency to retard the faculty of knowing. In what different ways do we know? We must classify the various forms of knowledge then we can know that those forces which obscure the growth or manifestation of the different form of knowledge, are the very Karmas which have been called the first class. The nature of this first class could not be understood unless we understand the different ways in which the function of knowing manifests itself. (There are as many forms of knowledge as there are living beings, as no two persons' knowledge is alike, but still we can classify the kinds.)

The first form of knowledge, which is the basis of all phenomena of consciousness and of all activities of mind, is the knowledge based on the senses including the knowledge based on the activity of the mind And this form of knowledge, is called in the Jain philosophy (मनि) Matijñana that is, sensuous knowledge plus something else The initial stages of sensuous knowledge are knowledge, sensation is a degree of knowledge It is not the bundle of sensations that make up knowledge, but it is the sensations in the higher form There is a kind of Matijñana which does not depend upon reading or hearing The cause of the presence of the knowledge is not to be found in anything that person has done in this life but by reason of some thing he has done in a previous life (For instance, if upon seeing a grasshopper for the first time he is once under its wings) Then again the moral nature helps to give a knowledge and also with age the person is able to do better than he did in the early part of life, which improvement is not the result of study or reading

And also there is the Matijñana which is the result of study or reading

The 2nd form of knowledge is (प्रेत) Pratilambika Knowledge gained through reading, study Knowledge derived from the interpreting of symbols or signs Words are symbols of ideas Knowledge derived from any kind of sign If a dog sees his master wave his hand, the dog interprets the sign and knows that his master wants him to come This is a higher form or channel of knowledge than the first, but still it is based on sensation if we do not first see or hear or feel the sign we cannot interpret it.

The 3rd form of knowledge is called (अवधी) Avadhi It depends entirely upon the activity of the ego without the activity of the mind or the senses and still it is knowledge limited in extent and content

The 4th form of knowledge is (मन पयव) Manah-paryava-jnana or mind-knowing

The 5th form of knowledge is (केवल) Kevala, or omniscience, knowledge which has no limitations as to space or time or subject

The first two forms of knowledge are the only two recognized in the West and it is in this stage that most people are

Memory, judgement, perception, etc, are the results of the removal of knowledge obscuring karmas

THIRD LECTURE.*

The consciousness of the individual is not identical with the physiological activity of the body, the one may even be dependent upon, but it is different from the other. Consciousness is one thing, activity of brain molecules is another different thing.

Knowledge when it is right true and corresponds to the facts, is the essential quality of the soul, it is that which would be manifested if there were no mistakes the cause of mistakes in the knowledge obscuring karma owing to karma we make mistakes in perceiving, judging etc.

Anything that takes place on account of the joint action of the soul and the karma is from the ideal standpoint the unnatural condition of the soul.

There was not any particular time in the past when this entity called the soul was without any karma, because if we assume that there was then it follows that after taking the trouble to remove the karmas through mental and moral disciplines after going through a lot of ordeals we might again come into combination with karmas. The fundamental basis of the philosophy is that, so far as the past is concerned there was not any time when the soul was without any karma.

The combination of the soul and the karma is not a mechanical mixture, separable by simply taking apart as a coat from the body. The combination of the soul with karma is a subtle combination and can be seen thus: in a mechanical mixture the substances are only in juxtaposition, such as sugar and water and you can separate one from the other readily. Then there is chemical combination when two or more substances unite to that the compound cannot be seen in its elements. Water, for instance, is a compound of hydrogen and oxygen, and these in combination make water, which is a quite different substance from either and neither hydrogen nor oxygen can be seen in it. So it is with the combination of the soul with karma: the combination is even more subtle than the chemical combination, and the result is a different substance from either of the ingredients.

The soul is a supersensuous substance. In thought, it can be divided into parts but not actually, it cannot be actually taken apart.

To reduce the combination of soul and karma, you have to use certain mental and moral disciplines.

Each state of the soul had a beginning (that is, any one given particular state. It was always in the past combined with karma, but its combination with any particularly mentioned or given karma at a particularly mentioned time—this particular state had its beginning), but the soul itself, which is the subject of these states, had no beginning. There never was a first state, in the sense of their being no previous one.

It is unnatural for the soul part of the compound (with anger, for instance, which is a karma) to act in an angry manner. We commonly hear it said of a person, that he acted in anger, he was not himself.

There will be a time in the future, when the soul is without karma and once without it will always thereafter henceforth be without, perfect and liberated.

In every activity of a living being in the embodied state, there are two sides: an objective and a subjective side. In the activity of sensation, there are the two sides: the objective side and the subjective side (internal side). The objective organs of sensation (eyes, nose, etc.), and the subjective organs of sensation each having many subdivisions.

When consciousness is only representing something to itself or comparing ideas, then neither instrument has to be used, and this is 'manas' (mind).

and it is only found in living beings having five organs of sensation [As before mentioned, this doctrine of karma applies to all living beings, and not merely to man] The mind has also two sides, objective and subjective

All knowledge itself has two aspects or points of view, namely the right and the wrong. One person forms a judgment, perhaps about another person, and it is a wrong judgment. And until we get the habit or the ability of assuming the right attitude, we cannot form right judgments with reference to the first form of knowledge, or matijñana, we now come to the different stages of this form of knowledge, the process

There are five stages in the process, namely —

1 In this first stage, what takes place is the establishment of the relation of contact between the organs of sensation and the vibrations from the external object in the external world. The stimulus from outside, creates a sort of excitation in the end-organ (ear, eye etc) — only in the organs of sensation and not in the mind. In this first stage a relation is established between the subjective and objective world

2 After the relation is established, a kind of excitation takes place in the consciousness, where the person thinks 'What is that?' This second stage in the process, is the first activity of the mind (manas) It is the state, of mind to which the person asks himself 'What is that?' or 'What was that?' When recalling something seen or heard in the past

3 Then after the mind has thus been aroused there follow three more stages in the process of knowing the object. The mind itself does not come into contact with the physical object and does not pass through the above mentioned stage No 1 & 2 it is as the 2nd. In the 3rd stage recognition is made the consciousness begins to rise in this way, —(suppose I see something in the distance which I cannot quite make out) "What is this? really cannot be a person, as it has that shape and yet it does not move etc. It is a kind of recognition and is the consciousness of mind (manas) and the latter

4 And then you come to the fourth stage. It is the conclusion 'No, it is not a person' and it is a human being. (We on psycho-metric would say that all this is the activity of the mind)

5 In this stage a kind of process goes on, in the consciousness of the individual and the result of the process is the presentation to a more or less even of the consciousness acquired in this way. A modification of the consciousness has taken place and will last a certain length of time and this lasting quality is called the 'Bhava' (The names of the previous stages are given below) This last stage manifests in the form of the continuance for a certain length of time of the new knowledge. It may also manifest itself in the form which results in only certain impressions made on our consciousness—on account of the impressions the life of the individual is so changed that the activities will in future be different. And a third way in which the last stage of the process of mutijnana manifests itself is that the thing (the thing newly known) can be remembered—it is memory. Memory as a faculty, is the last result of the activities which are classed under mutijnana or the first form of knowledge.

All except the first stage of these five stages of the process, are the activities of the mind (manas)

The obscuring karma being removed the quality of the soul called memory is able to manifest itself.

Any activity of the individual which lessens the capacity of the organs of sensation or of the mind to pass through any of these stages is knowledge obscuring karma, and each person must discover these karmanas or activities for himself, otherwise he does not know what the karmanas are, simply to tell him that there are knowledge obscuring karmanas is to tell him nothing.

The names of the above mentioned stages are

- 1 Vyanjana avagraha
- 2 Artha avagraha

- 3 Iha
- 4 Avaya
- 5 Dharana

(The following is in my notes taken at the time of the lecture) —Throughout the whole process, the working of the mutijana is dependent upon the interpretive faculty, either of the words of a language, or of the actions of the hands and body, etc. There are two kinds of mutijana, one which is based and one which is not based on this interpretive faculty

(With reference to the statement above that each state of the soul had a beginning I asked the question "If each state had a beginning, then it follows that the state of being in combination with karma, must have had a beginning and yet it was said that the state of being with karma had no beginning. How are these statements reconciled? I received the answer and saw the solution. The question arises from ambiguity in the meaning of the word 'state'. The particular state in which the soul is at any given date and place did have a beginning. The state of existence. If 'existence' can be called a state it should rather be called a 'fact'; the 'fact' of existence did not have a beginning there never was a time when the individual soul did not exist in some state and in some place.)

FOURTH LECTURE.

It is the classification of the karmas from the point of view of their nature or function that is now being given. Class I has been called knowledge-obscuring karma or Jnanavaraniya karma. And as there are five forms of knowledge as already mentioned, so there are five subdivisions of this Class I, namely, karma which obscures either the mutijnana, the shrutajnana, the avadhi, the manah paryavajana, or the kevala jnana.

(This detailed classification of the karmas, or rather the subdivisions of the eight Classes, continues now up to the end of the lecture. No 9, Class 1 is subdivided into 5 subdivisions. Class 2 into 9 subdivisions, Class 3 into 2 subdivisions, Class 4 into 28 subdivisions, Class 5 into 4 subdivisions. Class 6 into 103 subdivisions. Class 7 into 2 subdivisions, Class 8 into 5 subdivisions)

To continue with the subdivisions of CLASS No 1

Subdivision the 2nd is that karma which obscures the second form of knowledge (shrutajnana). Shrutajnana is knowledge acquired by interpreting signs to know through signs is shrutajñana. Reading is interpreting signs there are the signs by which we know that a man is angry a man sweating is a sign, that there is something the matter with his nervous system.

Subdivision the 3rd is that karma which observes the form of knowledge known as śraद्धijñana. In this form of knowledge the soul or ego comes to know about material objective things as it beings without the use of the senses or the mind. It is the next higher form of knowing after shrutajñana. The karma which observes this form of knowing is active in nearly all of us. By this means of knowing we become aware of physical things as a distance without going to the place or having the circumstances in contact with the object. So that when in London you know what is going on in New York or in May or on the Sun. It is only material matters that are known by this means (as distinguished from ideas or thoughts, as referred to in the following division of knowledge). Take as for the following a few rough particulars) given about the kinds of this śraद्धijñana: (a) the kind which follows you from place to place so that you have this way of knowing in whatever town or place you may be. (b) The kind which is with you only at a certain town or place and nowhere else so that if you leave that town, you lose the ability to know in that way. (c) The kind which is increasing so that as time goes on you are able to more and more know by this means [d] The kind which decreases every moment, so that as time goes on, you are able less and less to know by; this means until it may disappear (e) When you have just one flash of knowing in this way during the life and no more either before or after (f) When it comes it stays You get it and keep it.

Subdivision the 4th Is that Karma which obscures the form of knowing called 'Manah-paryavajana' It is mind knowing you know the other person's mind what the ideas and the thoughts are In the avadhi you may see the mental pictures which the thoughts of the man produce but you do not know his real thoughts or mind Things and objects can be seen but thoughts cannot be seen they can be known You know an idea you do not literally see it In this form of knowing you actually know the thoughts of people [Of course it is obscured in us, and is not recognized as a way of knowing in the West]

Subdivision the 5th Is that Karma which obscures the form of knowing called Kevala jnana, knowledge which is quite unlimited and disembodied,

Thus in CLASS No 1 of the 8 classes of karma there are the above mentioned 5 subdivisions

With reference to the avadhi jnana it was said in illustration of the (e) kind that a pupil of a teacher had the perception by this means of some man and wife in a distant planet and being amused with what they were doing, the pupil smiled and laughed, and then the sight disappeared. The teacher said that the act of laughing stopped the knowing. In laughing he left off knowing.

The knowing faculty is one aspect of the pure soul. There are other aspects, but knowing is one.

From the low standpoint (see later on under Nigoda) the karma is a higher stage. From the ideal standpoint the karma is an obstruction. The stage of karma is a stage in the line of progress of the soul from the low standpoint.

(Darshanavaraniya karma)

Darshana, as already mentioned, means detailless knowledge, you simply know a thing as belonging to a class, without going into its attributes or ways of behaving. In Jnana (knowledge) you know the ins and outs to some extent. Detailed knowledge is Jnana. There are the following 9 subdivisions of this 2nd Class of Karma namely —

- 1 Karma which obscures the Darshana, (there is no one English word which will correctly translate this word) which is received through the eye
- 2 Karma which obscures the darshana received through any sense other than the eye (ear, nose, tongue, or skin)
- 3 Karma which obscures the avadhi (there is no equivalent English word) darshana
- 4 Karma which obscures the Kevala darshana

In the following five states the senses are not active, and therefore you do not see, or hear or smell &c. The sleep states in their various degrees are among these states

- 5 Sleep from which a person can be awakened without any trouble simply by calling his name. He will hear his name but will not hear other conversation or sounds

Subdivisions of Class 4

There are 28 subdivisions of this kind of karma, but these 28 can be classified under two heads, namely the first 3 are called darshana mohaniya karmas whose nature is to obstruct the faculty of relishing the truth when it is heard. And the remaining 25 are called charitra mohaniya karmas, whose nature is, to obstruct right conduct. You may relish it and still you cannot practise it, you perhaps feel weak and so do not practise the truth which it relished.

THE DARSHANA MOHANIYA KARMAS ARE —

- 1 That karma by reason of the activity of which you do not believe in the truth at all when it is presented to you, the person is entirely under the rule of delusion.
- 2 That karma by reason of which you believe for some time, and then there is a doubt you are all the time vacillating.
- 3 That karma by reason of which, while believing in the truth all the time still at certain moments you feel that there is something more to be known. There is just a little vacillation in this state.

THE CHARITRA MOHANIYA KARMAS ARE —

- 1 Anger of an intense degree,
- 2 Anger of a less intense degree
- 3 Anger of a milder degree,
- 4 Anger of a still milder degree
- 5 Pride of an intense degree
- 6 Pride of a less intense degree
- 7 Pride of a milder degree
- 8 Pride of a still milder degree
- 9 Deceitfulness of an intense degree
- 10 Deceitfulness of a less intense degree
- 11 Deceitfulness of a milder degree,
- 12 Deceitfulness of a still milder degree
- 13 Greed of an intense degree
- 14 Greed of a less intense degree
- 15 Greed of a milder degree
- 16 Greed of a still milder degree
- 17 Laughing and joking
- 18 Confirmed improper liking (liking without looking to the merits of the thing liked)
- 19 Confirmed improper disliking
- 20 Sorrow, or grief (which would include worry)
- 21 Fear (nearly all wrong action can ultimately be traced to fear)
- 22 Disgust
- 23 The male sex passion
- 24 The female do
- 25 The neuter do

This completes the list of the 25 kinds of the Class 4 or Mohan ya karmas, the nature of which is to intoxicate or infatuate the mind in such a way that it cannot distinguish between right and wrong belief or conduct. Now follows a more detailed description of them.

ANGER The four degrees of anger may be compared respectively to first the split in the side of a mountain. It will be the entire whole if the anger causes a variation between persons and in this which is the more intense degree the anger is so great towards the person that you feel you can never be friendly or amiable towards him (or her). This is merely the description of the degree of anger of course by an effort of will and unlearning it can be overcome. The next degree which is less intense may be compared to joints in clay. They will remain until rain falls and, moistening the clay, the joints will be joined together. You may be angry with a person until some body else comes and makes peace by taking and showing or explaining the folly of anger. The next degree may be compared to rats in sand, they will remain until the wind blows the sand together and the next degree of anger can be compared to a log tied in water with a nail; the joint is affected as soon as a person in treatment is withdrawn; in this degree the anger is checked by the mind the moment it is in a burning

PRIDE The most intense degree may be compared to a pillar of stone you can never make it bend, the mand never yields, not when is wrong and is not tolerant, his obstinacy is very great (when he is in the wrong is meant) The less intense degree may be compared to a bone, it is difficult to bend if it is only with great difficulty that the person who has this degree of pride will yield to certain things which he ought to yield to The next degree upwards may be compared to a dry piece of wood if you apply oil, or soak it in water for sometime then it bends but still not very easily The next degree is like cane you can bend it at once, the person yields at once to the right Pride is like a mountain in front of one, it hides the view, it obscures knowledge, we do not see beyond that which is immediately in front of us

DECEITFULNESS Its chief characteristic is crookedness the conflict between the thought and the action The first or worst degree may be compared to the knot in bamboo, you cannot make it straight The next to the horns of sheep it is with great difficulty that they can be straightened The next to the course of water from a sprinkling can, it will be there so long as the water is there but it will dry up and then the crookedness will be gone (the wave line of water) The next to shavings of wood they are bent but you can straighten them at once. Deceit prevents right belief about people

GREED The chief characteristic is attachment or clinging to, it is the identifying of the self with the not-self (I think it was to illustrate this that the lecturer said when my child broke a cup and saucer the other day I got angry and yet half a dozen cups may break in the China shop next door and I do not feel injured or get angry about it) (The character is not injured by such losses, the moral nature but it is injured by the anger) The worst degree of greed may be compared to fast dye it cannot be removed it will last the whole life time Next to grease from a cartwheel hub it is very difficult to remove Next to colour which can be washed off with soap and water Next to colour that can be washed off with water, you put it in water and the colour is off

These qualities of anger, pride, deceitfulness and greed are qualities in a man's nature by virtue of which he cannot act rightly Now there are nine more namely

LAUGHING & JOKING When we are in this mood, we are not in the straight line of the acquisition of truth It stops the right action and the right attitude

IMPROPER AND CONFIRMED PREJUDICIAL THINKING Such as 'party' spirit, which upholds the political party whether right or wrong; favouritism, etc It is when the merits and demerits are not regarded

IMPROPER AND CONFIRMED PREJUDICIAL DISLIKINGS Same as the previous only disliking instead of liking

SORROW is an obstacle to right conduct, because in the state of sorrow the actions are only such as are injurious. There is also the tendency to unjustly accuse other people when in sorrow

FEAR Fear stops right action, very many wrong actions can be ultimately traced to fear. Fear is replaced by the desire to do good to others, by sympathy, the more there is of benevolence the less there is of fear

DISGUST is an obstruction to knowledge and to right action. Instead of going further into the matter you are disgusted and stop knowing about it there should be the recognition that the thing can only exist in those circumstances. A disgusting smell of decaying fish, for instance

SEX PASSION The sex passion that is to be found in men the sex passion that is to be found among women and the sex passion that is to be found in those who have no sexual signs but still they have the passion and theirs is the strongest of all. When a person is under the influence of the sexual passion he is not conscious of what is right and what is wrong

So we have 28 mohaniya karmas, they can be compared to an alcoholic liquor they intoxicate

SIXTH LECTURE

As the karmas are foreign substances obscuring the qualities of the soul, it follows that upon the removal of them the soul's greatness becomes manifest.

That quality of the soul which consists in its being free from all karmas is removed is called ananta (infinite). When the velanaya or class 3 karma is removed, then the quality of its being infinite appears is permanent. But the velanaya karma obscures the bliss quality of the soul. When the class 4 or mohanaya karma is removed, then there is always right belief and right conduct, we always form the right and always act rightly. This point follows in proper order after the details of the remaining classes of karma.

This karma is called Ayuh karma. It determines how long we live in a particular body, it may be compared with fetters it prevents the realisation of the spiritual continuous life, and after this karma is removed the soul lives in its own body and not in any physical or karmic body. There are four subdivisions of the ayuh karma, namely

1 That karma by reason of which the person lives for a length of time (it may be a billion years) in the pleasurable condition, known as the Devas, having a fine subtle body

2 That karma by reason of which the person lives for a length of time (it may be a billion years) in the lower subtle body condition, in which there is no pleasure at all but pain all the time. It is called the Naraka condition

3 That karma by reason of which, the person lives in the human state with a physical body. It is called Manushayuh karma

4 is that karma by reason of which, the entity lives as an animal, with a body as found among animals (This includes worms, birds, vegetables, bears etc.) Tiryanchayuh karma

The ayuh karma determines the state, in which the entity has to stay, and is caused by the words, and thoughts and actions in the previous life immediately next backwards

Subdivisions of Class 6

There are 103 subdivisions of this Karma. It is called 'Nama Karma' (Name Karma). It gives the personality, and when destroyed or lost or removed the soul does not pass through these altered phases of matter and spirit. When worked out the nature of the individual is the same all the time his personality is fixed and it is a continuation of a soul in the present condition. The 103 karmas are grouped as follows

- 14 which are called 'Collector karmas', the collector staff of the various karmas
- 8 which are called 'pa'yaku praiti karmas'
- 10 which is a collection called 'trava dathaks'
- 10 Which is a collection called 'chavara dathaks'

But this only makes 42 but the 2nd 14 are by smaller subdivisions made into 72.

The 61 are the 14 + 47 = 61 of the Karma karmas are as follows, and to refer to gathering them it can be remembered that they consist of 16 groups and 16 groups are called 'chavara' or 'chavara'.

GROUP I

4 Gati nāma karmas, namely

1 Deva gati nama karma, is that karma that brings the living being into that state of existence known as the Deva state it is a pleasureable state in a fine subtle body, perhaps comparable to the Christian heaven It is a state, in which pleasure preponderates over pain there is some pain but mostly pleasure

2 Naraka gati nama karma || that karma which brings the living being into the naraka state where there is no pleasure at all, but pain all the time, perhaps comparable to the Christian hell (But it is not everlasting, it comes to an end)

3 Manushya gati nama karma, is that karma which brings the living being into the human state, our ordinary human life

4 Tiryancha gati nama karma, is that karma which brings the living being into the animal state, (animal insect, fish bird, vegetable, or mineral life)

GROUP 2

5 Jāti nāma karmas

5 That karma by reason of which the living being has the sense of touch

6 That karma by reason of which the living being has the senses of touch and taste [If a living being has only one sense, it is always the sense of touch, if two only, it is always touch and taste and so on with the following]

7. That karma by reason of which the living being has the variety of touch taste and smell

8 That Larus by reason of which the Fol-being has the same of touch is 1/2, 3/4, and 5/8

Q That larvae by reason of which are living being in the same a French one, and so on and bearing (Vegetables would have only one origin of the same of French)

55-1573 - 1312 - 1313 - 1314 - 1315

10. Another wheel is known as the Karma wheel by reason of which the living being has the various phys. & body the we actually see.

“ As to the other names, I am to be advised of the activity of this name, the Holier being his a noble body, which is chosen, and it may be large and then small have one shape and then another. The bridge is the state of Deva and is the state of Naraka have this body and not a physical body.”

12 Aharaka sharira nama karma, gives a body that can be sent by the person to a Master It is only very advanced beings that have this body

13 Taljasa sharira nama karma, gives a body which consumes food and when highly developed and rendered more subtle it can be protruded from the person and consume or burn up other things or persons or bodies

14 Karmana sharira nama karma gives the body which is made up of all the karmas put together It is changing every moment

Of these five bodies, we all of us here have the physical, the digesting body, and the karmana body We may or may not have the subtle or vaikriya body while only the very spiritually advanced have the aharaka body

3 Upāṅga nāma karmas, namely

15 Andarika Upanga nama karma, is that karma, on account of which the limbs and organs of the physical body are formed, internal and external organs arms, legs, ears lungs etc

16 Vaikriya upanga nama karma, would form the limbs and organs of the subtle or vaikriya body

17 Aharaka upanga nama karma, produces the limbs of the aharaka body

6 That karma by reason of which the living being has the senses of touch and taste [If a living being has only one sense, it is always the sense of touch if two only it is always touch and taste and so on with the following]

7, That karma by reason of which the living being has the senses of touch, taste, and smell

8 That karma by reason of which the living being has the senses of touch, taste, smell, and sight.

9 That karma by reason of which the living being has the senses of touch, taste, smell, sight, and hearing (Vegetables would have only one organ of sense the sense of touch)

GROUP 3

5 Shar ta v'ra /a'ra ra' /a'

10 Andarika sharita nama karma, is that karma by reason of which the living being has the ordinary physical body, that we actually see

11 Vakariga sharita nama karma, by reason of the activity of this karma the living being has a subtle body, which is changeable it may be large and then small have one shape and then another The beings in the state of Deva and in the state of Naraka have this body and not a physical body

12 Aharaka sharira nama karma, gives a body that can be sent by the person to a Master. It is only very advanced beings that have this body.

13 Taijasa sharira nama karma, gives a body which consumes food, and when highly developed and rendered more subtle it can be protruded from the person and consume or burn up other things or persons or bodies.

14 Karmana sharira nama karma, gives the body which is made up of all the karmas put together. It is changing every moment.

Of these five bodies, we all of us here have the physical the digesting body, and the karmana body. We may or may not have the subtle or vaikriya body while only the very spiritually advanced have the aharaka body.

3 Upāṅga nāma karmas, namely

15 Andarika Upanga nama karma, is that karma, on account of which the limbs and organs of the physical body are formed internal and external organs arms, legs, ears lungs etc.

16 Vāikriya upanga nama karma, would form the limbs and organs of the subtle or vaikriya body.

17 Aharaka upanga nama karma, produces the limbs of the aharaka body.

The taljasa and the karmana bodies do not have limbs or organs

GROUP 5

15 Bandhana nama karmas, namely

18 Andarika bandhana nama karma, this karma when it is working binds together the different parts of the physical body it is the assimilation karma, the activity of this karma mixes the foreign matter and makes it one lump changing its nature

19 Vaikriya bandhana nama karma, same as the previous one only applying to the subtle body instead of the physical body

20 Aharaka bandhana nama karma same thing only for the aharaka body

21 Taljasa bandhana nama karma same thing for the taljasa body

22 Karmana bandhana nama karma, for the karmana body

23-32 Then by other combinations of two and sometimes of three of the kinds of matters ten more kinds are produced, but it is unnecessary to give them

GROUP 6

5 Sanghatana nama karmas namely

33 Andarika sanghatana nama karma by reason of the activity of which you take in as it were from the outside or rake together the matter for the physical body. Literally it means 'collecting', or 'bringing together'. That which collects materials from outside to form the eye etc., this karma works outside and brings things together into 'heaps' as it were.

34 Vaikriya sanghatana nama karma, same as the previous, only for the vaikriya or subtle body

35 Aharaka sanghatana : nama karma, for the aharaka body

36 Taijasa, the same as the previous for the taijasa body

37 Karmana sanghatana nama karma, for the karmana body

6 Samhanana nāma karmas namely

38 The function of this karma is to join the bones together, and this particular karma gives a particularly strong joint. It is the highest form of joint. The ends of the bones are hooked into each other, there is a sort of bolt or pin through the hook, and the whole joint is covered with an envelope of tissue. It is called Vajra-rishabha narach-asamhanana nama karma. Vajra means the 'pin'.

39 Rishabha naracha-samhanana nama karma The same as the previous one, only without the pin

40 Naracha-samhanana nama karma, same as the previous only with the envelope omitted Only the hook remains

41 Aidha naracha samhanana nama karma The bones are at one end hooked into each other, and pinned, with no envelope, while at the other end, the bone is simply straight and pinned

42 Kilika-samhanana nama karma The bones are straight at each end and nailed No hook and no envelope

43 Chhethitha samhanana nama karma This karma gives a joint where the bones simply touch, or are in sockets Most of ours are like this, it is the weakest and worst form of joint The teaching is that the greatest degree of concentration can only be attained in a body, having the first mentioned joints (Vajra &c)

6 Samsthāna nāma karmas, namely

44 Sama-chatur asra samsthana nama karma By reason of this karma, the body is symmetrical

45 Vyagrodha sansthana nama karma, By reason of this karma the upper part of the body is symmetrical and the lower part is not The lower part is defective by reason of this karma

6 Sadi sansthana nama karma By reason of which the lower part of the body is asymmetrical, but the upper part is not

47 Kubja samsthana nama karma The trunk is de formed by reason of this karma, while the legs, arms, face, neck are symmetrical (Humpback, for instance)

48 Vamana samsthana nama karma, by reason of this karma the arms and legs are defective, while the trunk is all right [dwarf]

49 Hunda samsthana nama karma, by reason of which everything is unsymmetrical The bodies of animals fish birds insects come under this class, the human form being considered as the symmetrical form

All beings born in the womb may have any of these six kinds of bodies : those living beings not born in the womb can have only the hunda body

GROUP 9

5 Varna nāma karmat, namely

50 By reason of the activity of this karma the living being is black or blue black

51 By reason of this karma he [it] is green

52 By reason of which the being is yellow

53 By reason of which the being is red

54 By reason of which the being is white fair

Of the above colours, the 1 and 2 are inferior, (though in respect to things other than colour the prison may be superior), and the 3 4 and 5 are superior colours It does not follow that because a person is inferior in this one particular that he is therefore inferior in all, or if superior, superior in all A white man may be a thief and, a murderer, a black man may be virtuous, and spiritually advanced

2 Gandha nāma karmas, namely

55 That karma which makes the general odor of the body pleasant

56 That karma which makes the general odor of the body unpleasant

5 Rasa nāma karmas, namely

57 By reason of this karma the body, if tasted would be like pepper—that is hot, but not fire heat

58 The body if tasted would be bitter

59 „ astringent

60 „ sour

61 „ sweet

GROUP 12

8 Sparsha nāma karmas, namely

62 That karma which makes the body feel —heavy

63 „ light

64 Which makes the body feel smooth

65 „ rough

66 „ cold

67 „ warm

68 „ oily

69 „ dry

4 Anupurvā nāma karmas, namely

70 That karma by which the direction of the living being, at death, is determined towards the place of the Devas (There must be some force which causes the person at death to travel in the right direction to reach his next destination, whether to another planet or els where, and it is this karma)

71 That karma which determines the direction of the living being at death towards the place of the Narakas

72 That karma which determines the right direction of travel at death, for the entity to go to the place of the human beings

73 ditto animals, (tiryarchas)

2 Vākyo gati nāma karmas namely

74 That karma by reason of which the gati is bad (As for instance when the feet are turned inwards and are dragged along shuffling)

75 That karma by reason of which the gati is good

That completes the first batch of 14 groups of 'collective' personality or nama karma. Now follow three more batches, namely of 8, 10 and 10 respectively, namely —

8 Pratyeka Prakriti nama karmas

76 Paraghata nama karma, by the reason of this karma the person does not get conquered or beaten

77 Utchchhvasa nama karma by reason of the activity of which, the person is able to breathe fully To the extent that this karma is weak the person is not able to breathe

78 Atapa nama karma its nature is to give a kind of warm lustre and to make others feel a warmth in the presence of the person (not always pleasant), though the person himself does not feel this warmth We may feel overawed in the presence of that person

79 Udyota nama karma gives a bright lustre, but it is cool not warm as the previous one was so that you feel at home with the person

80 Agurnlaghu nama karmas makes the body neither heavy nor light

81 Tirthankara nama karma, is that karma by the generation of which and through the activity of which the person in some incarnation becomes a master.

82 Nirmanā nama karma, by reason of which the different organs and limbs of the body come to be in the right places

83 Upaghāta nama karma, by reason of which the organs are placed in such a way that instead of getting the normal pleasures from the normal activities, we get pain. This karma brings functional disorders so that in the function of the organ pain is produced. (This karma has some relation with the Vedanīya or pain karma.)

10 Trasa dashaka (Dashaka means ten)

84 Trasa nama karma, technically means (the word trasa, that is) a living being who can move about voluntarily. Bees, fish, birds, animals, etc. By reason of the activity of this karma the living being passes from a stationary state (tree, for instance) to a state in which the body has voluntary motions.

85 Badara nama karma, by reason of which karma, the living being passes from a body which is so minute as to be invisible to a body, which is large enough to be visible.

86 Paryapta nama karma paryapta means capability. Through the activity of this karma, the living being has the capacity to complete the construction of the various bodily parts and capacities, the capability to fully develop them. There are various capacities, for instance, to take food from the outside, to assimilate it with the body, etc etc. He has the capability to complete these capacities by reason of this Karma.

87 Pratyeka nama karma, is that Karma by reason of which a living being obtains an individual body, a body for itself. There are living beings having a common body so that many may be living in one body such as vegetables growing underground.

88 Sthira nama karma by reason of which, the teeth and bones are quite strong, solid, substantial and coherent.

89 Shubha nama karma, by reason of which the upper part of the whole body is symmetrical. There is a difference between this and the nyagrodha samsthana nama karma, in this shubha karma the point is that the upper part of the body pleases other people, and also the lower part need not necessarily be defective. In the nyagrodha karma the point is that the construction is symmetrical, and the lower part must be defective.

90 Saubhagya nama karma, an activity by reason of which the person becomes quite popular.

91 Stava nama karma by reason of which the voice is musical.

92 Adeya nama karma, by reason of which the person's words obtain weight among people he is believed.

93 Yashah kirti nama karma, by reason of which the person becomes famous [In the good sense]

10 Stavara Dashaka.

94 Stavara nama karma this is the contrary of the first karma of the previous ten (counterpart just above is wrong it is the contraries) By reason of this karma the living being goes to a stationary body

95 Sukshma nama karma, which makes the body so small that it cannot be seen by the eyes

96 Aparyapta nama karma, by reason of this karma the living being does not complete the body and dies

97 Sadharana nama karma the living being occupies a common body one body for many living beings [potato, for instance]

98 Asthira nama karma, the teeth and bones are not fixed and coherent

99 Ashubha nama karma the upper part of the body is not symmetrical or pleasing, is not of a kind which pleases others

100 Dantbhagya nama karma, by reason of this karma he is unpopular, whether he is doing good or ill to the people

101 Duhsvara nama karma, the voice is not musical

102 Anadeya nama karma, by reason of which the person is not believed even though he is speaking the truth, his words do not carry weight

103 Apayashish apakirti nama karma, by reason of which there is disrepute [the opposite of fame]

That completes the list of 101 nama karmas
All these karmas can be changed and improved

Subdivisions of Class 7

The name of this class is Gotra karma, there are only two subdivisions, namely -

1 Uchcha gotra karma, which brings the living being, into high family surroundings

2 Nicha Gotra karma, by reason of which the living being is born into low family and social circumstances

Subdivisions of Class 8

The name is Antaraya karma Literally 'obstacle Karma This karma acts as an obstacle to that which you desire to do In the mohaniya [class 4] the inability to act rightly is owing to moral depravity (or uncleanness, rather, depravity implies a previous time of non-depravity, whereas the living being may always in the past have been of an unclean moral nature), and consequent non perception of what is right, whereas in the antaraya karma the right action is seen but is not done There are five kinds of this antaraya karma, namely -

1 Danantaraya karma, 'dana means to give By reason of this karma the person is obstructed or prevented from giving although it is the right time and place, and he has the means still he does not give

2 Labhantaraya karma, 'labh' means gain. This karma is that which is an obstacle to gain or profit. The person is a fit person and follows the usual methods of gaining and yet does not gain

3 Bhogantaraya Karma 'bhog' means enjoyment. This karma prevents the enjoying of objects or things which can be enjoyed more than once, pictures, scenery, furniture, etc etc. The things themselves are not faulty and yet the person is miserable although surrounded by enjoyable things

4 Upabhogantaraya Karma, 'upa' means less or sub. This karma prevents the enjoying of things which can be enjoyed only once a cake a glass of wine etc eating and drinking

5 Viryantaraya Karma, Viry (pronounced veeri) means force or power, he will to do. This karma acts as an obstacle to the will power you would like to do the thing but still you cannot you know that it is right yet you cannot do it there is weakness

This 8th class of antaraya karma is one which covers up one aspect of the real spiritual nature of the soul so that the goodness is not actual, it is not done actually (We'd mean'm is nothing, the intellect and the life must be improved)

Out of these 8 kinds of karma, these 8 classes that is, there are four which do and four which do not cover up the real spiritual nature of the soul, those which do cover it are the antaraya, just mentioned, the knowledge obscuring (jnanavaraniya), the darshana obscuring (darshanavaraniya) and the intoxicating or right belief preventing—(mohaniya) Those which do not cover up the spiritual nature of the soul are the 3rd class (vedaniya karma) the 5th class (ayuh karma), the 7th class (gotra karma) and the 6th class (nama karma) These last two are out of order)

These karmas are forces, they are living forces, not forces such as gravity, steam, or electricity

It is important to point out what has already been stated namely that the combination of the soul with the karma is a very subtle combination which can only be reduced by mental and moral disciplines hence the body is not in mechanical combination with the soul and cannot be separated and joined again like taking off and putting on a coat The soul and the body stay in combination until death, and if the body is in bed the soul is there also

Also the avadhi form of knowledge, by which the soul comes to know distant material things without the action of the sense organs or the mind operates while the senses are awake, and is in addition to and not replacing the ordinary five senses. All the higher forms of knowing are in addition to the lower forms the lower forms do not drop away as the higher ones develop, the five ways of knowing given are simply the order in which the soul develops itself. All knowledge is based on sensation.

And so we have in this rough classification of karmas, no less than 158 energies which are in us either active or dormant ready to break out as soon as the circumstances allow or cause. They are given in continuation of a previous series of 12 lectures on mental concentration and the idea is that the bad energies should be removed and good ones generated or developed.

The quality of the soul which comes out upon the removal of the 7th class of karma is that the circumstances or surroundings are neither high nor low, and when the 8th class is removed the quality of the soul that comes out is infinite capacities of activity (Not omnipotence. Yet cannot create souls, in the sense of their not having previously existed.)

List of the 158 Karmas —

Class 1	Jnanavaraniya karma	3 kinds,
Class 2	Darshanavaraniya karmas,	9 kinds.
Class 3	Vedaniya karma,	2 kinds.
Class 4	Mobaniya karmas...	23 kinds.

Class 5	Ayuh karma,	.. 4 kinds
Class 6	Nama karma,	...103 kinds
Class 7	Gotra karma,	2 kinds.
Class 8	Antaraya karma,	5 kinds.

 158

This classification is from the point of view of the nature or function of the karma. It is not from the point of view of the generation of karma, or working out of karma.

Causes of Karmas

Four general causes of karma have already been given namely delusion (mithyatva) aviratāśabara and yoga (it is easier to use these names than to use a whole sentence in English for each cause.) But these causes are each subdivided in greater detail

Mithyātva These are five kinds of this cause namely

- 1 Abhigraha mithyatva It is a state of mind in which you stick to a false belief. You may not know it. If you think, speak, or act when in this state you generate fresh karma [the kinds of karma which are generated by these causes are given in the next series of stages of Development following.]
- 2 Anabhigraha mithyatva It is a state of mind in which a person thinks 'well this may be true and also that may be true' or 'All religions are true.' He does not go into the matter.
- 3 Abhinivesha mithyatva It is the state of intentionally sticking to a false opinion when it is known or believed to be a false one

- 4 Samshaya mithyatva It is the state of doubt as to whether a given course of action is right or wrong You stand still.
- 5 Anabhoga mithyatva, It is a state of lack of development, and the entity, therefore sticks to a false belief or has no belief, not having developed the faculties of judgement conviction, discretion, &c he does not come to a conclusion

These causes are only the instrumental or determinant causes of the generation of the karma the substantial cause is the individual himself [or herself, of course always understood] The above mentioned particular states of the individual are determinant causes of the generation of karma, they are from the ideal standpoint unnatural states In every effect there are two causes, the substantial and the instrumental, both equally necessary for the effect

Asrava: It is the laxity or looseness either of thought or sense activities There are the following 12 kinds —

- 1 Lack of control of the thoughts In spite of knowing that we should not have, or in spite of our wish not to have evil thoughts about people, still we have them, such as thoughts of revenge thoughts of cheating other people, of deceiving them, of hurting them, etc., and so we generate karmas

- 2 Lack of control of the sense of touch
- 3 " taste,
- 4 " smell,
- 5 " sight,
- 6 " hearing
- 7 Lack of control of the mind or senses in regard to living beings not having the power of locomotion, and whose bodies are particles of earth—earth beings
- 8 " water—water beings
- 9 " air —air beings
- 10 " fire —fire beings
- 11 Lack of control of the mind or senses in relation to vegetables
- 12 Lack of control of the mind or senses in relation to living beings, that have the power of locomotion

Ans/En, is moral uncleanness and there are 25 states taken into consideration as being states worth, when the person is in, become the cause of the generation of karmas

- 1 to 4 Four degrees of anger
- 5 to 8 Four degrees of pride
- 9 to 12 Four degrees of deceitfulness
- 13 to 16 Four degrees of greed
- 17 to 25 The same as the remaining mohaniya karmas, laughing & joking, etc, down to the neuter sex passion

These are the same states as the 25 last mohaniya karmas, only here the point of view is that when in any one of these states the person generates or adds to his present karma. If, however, the attitude of the mind is one of aloofness then fresh karma is not generated he does not then identify himself with the anger for instance and so does not generate more

Yoga There are 15 kinds of this cause. In this relation in the Jain philosophy, the word yoga has the technical meaning of bodily, speech, or thought activity. (This is a technical meaning)

- 1 Satya-mano-yoga Activity of the mind it may be truthful. It generates a kind of karma
- 2 Asatya mano-yoga Activity of the mind which implies falsehood

- 3 Satya-asatya-mishrana-mano-yoga A state of mind when you may be thinking of something and that of which you are thinking relates partly to truth and partly to something which is false. It is a mixture of the two previous kinds
- 4 Asatya-mishrana-mano-yoga Activity of mind which has no reference to truth and does not relate to truth at all
- 5 to 8 Four kinds of speech activity, namely the same as those of the thought activities only with regard to speech

(In illustration of speech which does not relate to the subject of truth or falsity the sentence "Bring me my watch" is an example)

- 9 to 15 Seven kinds of bodily activity namely Activity of the physical body, activity of the vaikari body, activity of the sharika body, activity of the karmika body. This last includes the taljasa because these two bodies (the karmika and the taljasa) stay with the soul until worked out; they go with the soul at death to the next state of life. Then there are three more, namely bodily activities which are mixtures of the karmika and taljasa with any few particles of either the andarika, vaikari, or

aharaka body, before the body is fully formed Mishra means compound Andarika is the ordinary physical body

That makes the causes 57 in number, classed under four heads of respectively 5 mithyatva, 12 avirati, 25 kashaya, and 15 yoga

In removing these causes of the generation of karma, the mithyatva must be removed first it is not possible to remove the avirati first or the kashaya or the yoga Then the next in order, is the avirati, which must be removed before the kashaya, and the last to be removed is the yoga So that, in any person where there is mithyatva there is also lack of control of the thought and senses, there is also the list of 25 kashayas, either dormant or operating and there are the 15 yogas

STAGES OF DEVELOPMENT*

This, now, is from the point of view of generating karmas, as distinguished from the point of view we have previously had of the nature of the karmas. The matter now is about the generation of karma.

In describing which causes generate any particular karma stages are made use of as follows.

There are 14 guna sthana or stages of development. Guna means virtue, development the coming out of the real nature and essence of the soul. Sthana means stage.

These 14 may be roughly divided into 4 classifications (or five, see following) namely (1 = one for each cause)

One in which all the four causes of karma work, i.e. the mithyatva, the avarita bh. kashaya, and the yoga.

Another in which only the last three determine the cause, that is the avarita bh. kashaya and the yoga.

*This chapter is no longer coming in the flow of life Mr. Gandhi—[1944]

Another in which only the last two determinant causes work, that is the kashaya and the yoga

Another in which only the yoga works

Then there is the 14th gunasthana by itself It lasts only for a few moments There is neither the mithyatva, the avirati, the kashaya nor the yoga working

So that to work out the karmas, you begin with the mithyatva and remove it first

It is important to remember always that, these 14 stages, now about to be described are in their logical order and not in chronological order In the morning you may be in a low stage and in the afternoon in a higher one or vice versa you may be in a high stage in the morning and in a lower one in the afternoon The point is that, while in such stages you develop such and such karmas, and while in a high one you develop only certain karmas but all this comes in course

(MITHYATVA GUNASTHANA)

Called the Mithyatva Gunasthana It is a state the same as the first subdivision of the Class 4, or Mohaniya Karma It is a state in which the person has a very intense dislike of the truth, the dislike is so strong that he will not have anything to do with it at all The Karma is so intense as to prevent the possibility of believing the truth at all. It is the same as the above named (class 4 subdivision No 1) only the point of view now is different. The point of view here is the generation of fresh karma. There it was simply description of the character and nature of the karma (of the activity).

In this Gausathana the living being is liable to generate any of the following karmas namely

1 Any of the Janasatvika karmas that is of 7 kinds

2 Any of the ... karmas that is of 9 kinds

3 Either of the two Vedavira karmas that is of 2 kinds

4 Any of the ... subdivisions ... generated they are ... of the activity of the subdivision No 1 (called ... karmas) We generate the ... karmas and ... This makes 26 kinds liable to be generated

5 Either of the 4 ... karmas namely ...

6 Any out of 11 of the ... karmas (For this purpose of considering the generation of the Karmas, the 103 nama karmas are considered as 67, by including the 15 kinds of Bandhana nama karma and the 5 kinds of samghatana in the 5 sharira, and then the colour, the smell the taste and the touch nama karmas are each considered as being only one kind disregarding their various subdivisions, thus making only 4 kinds instead of 20 kinds, or 16 fewer, which together with the above 20 makes in all 36 fewer than 103, or 67)

7 Either of the gotra karmas that is of 2 kinds

8 Either of the antaraya karmas, that is of 5 kinds

In the first classification of the karmas, the total is 158 Reducing this by the above named 36, the remainder is 122 In the present mithyatva gunasthana the living being, therefore is liable to generate any one of 117 out of these 122 karmas (It will of course be seen what this means I say this myself only, but it follows that a man may generate an animal or insect or what not body)

So there are 5 karmas which are not generated in this mithyatva gunasthana, and they are

- 1 The Mishra mohaniya karma
- 2 The samyaktva mohaniya karma
- 3 The aharaka sharira nama karma
- 4 The aharaka Upanga nama karma
- 5 The Tirthankara nama karma

Then, there are certain karmas which are generated only in this stage and in no other they are (16 in all)

- 1 Mithyatva mohaniya karma
- 2 The neuter sex passion karma
- 3 The naraka syub karma (This is important to notice)
- 4 The naraka gati nama karma
- 5 The jati na ma ka na giving only one sense organ
- 6 ditto two
- 7 ditto three
- 8 ditto four
- 9 The chh-vaththhva sambhava nama karma [The thing being would not even have sockets]
- 10 The banda sansthana nama karma
- 11 The naraka anuparid na na karma
- 12 The atapa nama karma
- 13 The stavana nama karma (to a stony body),
- 14 Sukshma nama karma (minute body)
- 15 The aparyapa nama karma (die before completing the body)
- 16 Sadharana nama karma [Common body]

So that, in order to avoid generating any of these 16 karmas we must get away from the mithyatva state

nd Stage

(SASVADANA GUNASTHANA)

The above 16 karmas are not generated in this stage, of the 117 karmas generated [liable to be generated] in the first stage, the remaining 101 may also be generated in this stage

In this stage, the 5 mithyatva causes do not work. They are controlled. It is to be remembered that 'causes' here means only the instrumental or determinant cause, the living being himself is always the real cause [or rather the substantial cause both causes are equally necessary and real]

This stage is called sasvadana gunasthana. It is only a momentary state. It is after anger for instance, has risen and then subsided, and then is rising again there is a momentary sensation of the taste of the quiet state taste of the control of the mithyatva karma. It is not the state when the anger was subsided, that is a higher one, it is the momentary taste of that quiet state. It does not last long enough for the generation of some of the karmas.

The following 25 karmas liable to be generated in this stage, would not be generated in any higher stage —

1. Tiryancha gati nama karma. In any higher stage than this 2nd stage, you do not generate a Karma which takes you to the animal state

- 2 Tiryanchayubh kama
- 3 Tiryanch anupurva nama karma
- 4 Styannaddhi darshanavaradiya karma (Sri naribulstic)
- 5 Nidra nidra [sleep requiring touching of the body to arouse the person]
- 6 Prachala-prachala (asleep while the body is walking)
- 7 Daubhagya nama karma (unpopular)
- 8 Dubhava nama karma (Unusual value)
- 9 Anad-ya nama karma (words do not carry weight)
- 10 The worst degree of anger (Moheniya sub-division 4)
- 11 The worst degree of pride
- 12 The worst degree of deceit
- 13 The worst degree of greed
- 14 The nyagrodha samsthana nama karma
- 15 The nali samsthana nama karma
- 16 The kusha ditto
- 17 The Varana ditto
- 18 The Vishabha naracha samhanana nama karma (bone joint)
- 19 The Naracha samhanana
- 20 The Archa naracha samhanana
- 21 The Kshika samhanana.
- 22 The vicha gota karma

- 23 The Udyota nama karma
- 24 The Vihayo-gati nama karma [bad gait]
- 25 The feminine sex passion

In this 2nd gunasthana there are 50 determinant causes operative the 5 mithyatvas as already mentioned do not work and then there is the aharaka yoga and the aharaka mishra yoga which do not operate

(There seems to be a mistake about the hunda sansthana nama karma it seems to me it ought to be generatable in this 2nd stage seeing that the animal karmas can be generated, the tiryancha-gati, etc)

It may be useful here to mention four points of view with regard to karma namely

Bandha Means the process of actually becoming identified with or tied to the karma

Udaya Means literally 'rising up' or 'coming up' that is to say the actual showing of the activity of the karma and experiencing the actual result of the karma

Udirana Is the process of bringing the karma into operation earlier than it would naturally come into operation

Satta Is the state of the karma between the time when it is bound to the soul or absorbed by

- rate a Karma which takes you to the animal state
- 2 Thryanchayuh karma
 - 3 Tiryanch anupurvi nama karma
 - 4 Styanarddhi darshanavaratniya karma (Soma nambulistic)
 - 5 Nidra nidra [sleep requiring touching of the body to arouse the person]
 - 6 Prachala-prachala (asleep while the body is walking)
 - 7 Daurbhagya nama karma (unpopular)
 - 8 Duhsvara nama karma (Unmusical voice)
 - 9 Anadeya nama Karma (words do not carry weight)
 - 10 The worst degree of anger (Mohaniya sub-division 4)
 - 11 The worst degree of pride
 - 12 The worst degree of deceit
 - 13 The worst degree of greed
 - 14 The nyagrodha samsthana nama karma
 - 15 The sidi samsthana nama karma
 - 16 The Kubja ditto
 - 17 The Vamana ditto
 - 18 The Ri habha naracha-samhanana nama karma (bone joint)
 - 19 The Naracha samhanana
 - 20 The Ardha naracha samhanana
 - 21 The Kilika samhanana
 - 22 The Nicha gotra karma

- 23 The Udyota nama karma
- 24 The Vihayo-gati nama karma [bad gait]
- 25 The feminine sex passion

(There seems to be a mistake about the hunda sansthana nama karma it seems to me it ought to be generatable in this 2nd stage, seeing that the animal karmas can be generated, the tiryancha-gati, etc)

It may be useful here to mention four points of view with regard to karma namely

Bandha Means the process of actually becoming identified with or tied to the karma

Udaya Means literally 'rising up' or 'coming up' that is to say the actual showing of the activity of the karma and experiencing the actual result of the karma

Udgrana Is the process of bringing the karma into operation earlier than it would naturally come into operation

Satta Is the state of the karma between the time when it is bound to the soul or absorbed by the soul and when it manifests It is the dormant karma that is in us

And it may also be useful here to mention three states with regard to the karma so far as the working of it out is concerned namely —

Upashama This word is a noun and means control The state of upashama karma, therefore, would be the state of the karma when it is pressed down or controlled controlled by the will just when it is felt to be rising

Kashaya This word literally means destruction So that kashaya karma would be the total working out of the karma karma when it is entirely removed

Kshayopashama Part of the karma is controlled and part worked out

(MISHRA-DRISHTI-GUNA-STHANA)

It is of only a few moments duration In the first stage or mithyatva gunasthana, the state of mind is such that there is a positive dislike and repulsion of the truth In the 2nd stage or satvadhya gunasthana, there is just the taste of the control of the mithyatva (delusion), In this mishra—drishti gunasthana there is neither like nor dislike for the truth when it is presented to you you just let the truth pass by without either liking it or disliking it. It is a sort of indifference, and there is no great wish or desire or energy put forth in this state of mind. This third stage is the result of the rise of the mishra mohaniya karma (2nd sub-division of class 4). The mishra mohaniya karma is the most noticeable sign or characteristic of this stage.

In this stage, there are 43 out of the 57 determinant causes operative. Those not operative are the 5 mithyatvas, the worst degree of respectively anger, pride, deceitfulness, and greed the aharaka mishra yoga, the aharaka yoga the karmana yoga, the audarika mishra yoga and the vaikriya mishra yoga.

In this third stage the 25 karmas mentioned as being generated in no higher stage. Karmas not than the 2nd, would not be generated in this third stage. The 16 karmas generated in only the mithyatva gunasthana are not generated in this third. Nor are the aharaka shari the aharaka upanga, or the tathankara. The Deva aynh and the manushyaynh karmas are not generated in this third stage. And the mishra mohaniya and samyaktva mohaniya are not generated. This comes up to 48 karmas not generated leaving 74 which may be generated as follows below.

Ayuh karma cannot be generated in this stage because that strong wish which is the factor of the intelligence which generates ayuh karma is not strong enough in this third stage to generate the karma. The faculty of decision, the faculty through which we determine, is not strong or active here, in this weak indifferent state.

Karmas liable. In this stage the living being is liable to be genera to generate any one of 74 karmas, ten namely

- 5 or all of the jnanavaraniya
- 6 of the darshanavaraniya
- 2 or all of the vedaniva
- 19 of the mohaniya
- 36 of the nama
- 1 gotra
- 5 or all of the antaraya

(It is not necessary to name the particular 36 nama karmas as they can be arrived at by anyone who wants to know them by a little trouble.)

The other point, namely karmas not generated after this stage does not apply, is not needed.

With reference to the state of karma just mentioned called upashama, anger should be suppressed, controlled or pressed down[†] controlled by the will just when it is felt to be rising. (I appreciate this as indicating the way to rely not be angry or to really remove anger as distinguished from the merely pretending not to be angry—or any other vice than anger it is much easier to pretend not to have the defect, whatever it is and to persuade oneself that one does not want it and will try to remove it than it is to really determine to suppress or control the wrong state)

[Incidentally the Jain idea of the parts of a tree may be put in here, as I have them in my notes, and it was talked about at the time. The parts of a tree are fruit, flowers, bark wood, roots, leaves, seed. I think if I mistake not, no I am sure, the idea is that these are separate living beings which in their joint activity or life make what is known as a tree, the tree is not only one living being, that is the idea. And those like the leaves, flowers, and fruit which cannot live in circumstances of winter cold and snow die. And of course it also follows from this that ordinary flowers should not be picked. It is only a matter of degree of civilisation and development whether a person feels gentle and careful and thoughtful to this, to us rather great extent. Protection to life in all forms is the behaviour natural to a highly developed soul, as I understand it.]

Before proceeding with the next gunasthana, the 4th, there must be something said of what is called 'samyaktva'. It cannot be translated by one English word.

As soon as the mithyatva (delusion) is controlled, or inoperative, then there comes out the contrary quality called samyaktva. The 'tva' means ness

The essential for the appearance of this state is that the worst degree of anger, of pride, of deceitfulness, and of greed are removed or at least controlled and inoperative. Then a right attitude of thought, a right attitude towards truth, comes out. You are, for instance, convinced that to kill a living being is wrong. There is a relish of such convictions.

A man's whole progress depends upon his acquiring this samyaktva and it is present in each of the remaining 11 gunasthana or stages of development. It is therefore, present in the next gunasthana to be described, namely the 4th. All philosophy so-called and concentration, are of no use or are all false unless this state is reached. Now, then, is this samyaktva to be reached?

The man who wishes to obtain samyaktva must pass through three stages or processes. They are called respectively yatha pravritti-larana, apurva larana, and anuvrittilarana. But before describing them something must be said about the duration of laranas and the Jain idea of time.

The first of these three processes lessens the duration of the karmas, and that is the first thing to do in order to obtain the samyaktva

Time is the duration of the modification of substances. Duration is the fact that a given state of anything or being stays for a certain length of time. The modification (or state, that is) lasts for a certain length of time. (Time is not, therefore, any mysterious mystery, it is quite plain and graspable.)

The maximum time that the karmas could last is as follows, that is to say that any given karma which is in combination with the soul, would naturally be worked out during the time as given below but then it is to be understood that while this particular karma is working out, the individual may generate an addition of karma of a similar nature, and so although at the end of the following maximum times, the particular karma, would all be rid from the soul, yet the soul would be in combination with fresh karma if the inflow has not been stopped

The maximum duration of a jnanavaraniya karma could not be more than 3,000,000,000,000 000 sagaropamas, of a darshanavaran'iya karma the same of a vedaniya karma the same of a mohaniya karma 7,000,001,000,000 000 sagaropamas of a n-riz karma 2 000,000,000,000,000

sagaropamas, of a gotra karma the same, of an antaraya karma 3,000,000,000,000,000 sagaropamas

This subject is being considered with a view to showing how the samyaktva can be reached and so far as the samyaktva is concerned the ayuh karma is necessary and is not taken into account

A sagaropama is one thousand billion (that is to say in figures 1,000,000 000 000,000) palyopamas

A palyopama is an innumerable (not infinite but having a limit) quantity of years, so great that it cannot be numbered. An innumerable quantity is a limited quantity and will in time be exhausted. An infinite quantity will never be exhausted.

Although the above numbers are immense, still in view of the theory that so far as the past is concerned, we have to be without karma, the duration of our various karmas has already been considerably more than the above mentioned numbers of years.

In the Jain idea of time the smallest division is called a samaya. In a wink of the eye for instance, and such similar duration, there are innumerable samayas.

Innumerable samayas would make one avala

16,777 216 avalas make one mahurta (equal to 48 minutes, English time)

30 Muhurtas would make one day

15 Days would make 1 fortnight, etc

Innumerable years, as already mentioned, make one palyopama

To illustrate to the mind, the idea of a palyopama, if you dig a hole in the ground 8 miles long, 8 miles wide, and 8 miles deep, fill it with hair cut up into the shortest possible lengths, and press it into the whole, by marching heavy processions, steam rollers, or anything similar, over it, and then once a year, take out a piece of the hair, it will in time become emptied, but it will be in an innumerable quantity of years

Come back, now, to the process-s through which one must pass in order to reach the state of sam-yaktra. The first thing to do is to lessen the duration of the karmas, and the amount by which the duration is to be lessened, is the next question. Each of the seven above named karmas must be reduced to 100 000,000,000,000 years maximum duration and when the living being experiences the feeling, that this whole embodied life is a misery, it shows that this work of reduction has been done. This is the first process, called yatha pravrtti karana. This is only possible for a five sense-organ mind-endowed living being. Other lower living beings do not pass through this experience for first process at all. But this experience may be felt an infinity of times and still the living being may not pass into the next or second process.

A muhurta, as already mentioned, is 48 minutes English time, and 30 muhurtas are therefore, one day. If the living being can succeed in reducing by only 48 minutes, this one hundred billion years maximum duration of the karmas he is then in the 2nd process, called aparva karana which has to be passed through in order to obtain the samyaktva condition. This second process consists in the manifestation of a desire to remove the worst degree of anger, of pride, of deceitfulness and of greed. The first time this desire is experienced shows that this further reduction in the maximum duration has been effected. The literal meaning is 'not previously' that is, this desire has not been previously experienced.

The third process is the actual control of the worst degree of anger of pride, or deceitfulness, and of greed. Deceit is the conflict between the thought and the action, as already mentioned. The worst degree of anger is that which lasts the whole life time, and the way to test ourselves as to whether we have reached the 2nd process (aparva karana) is by considering and seeing whether there is any person, we know towards whom we are chronically angry and then the thought that we ought not after all to be so, would show that we were in the second process. The 3rd process is the actual control of the worst anger, pride, deceitfulness, and greed. The end of the apurva-karana is the beginning of the anti-vritti-karana.

When these three processes have been passed through, then the 'knot' is cut, so to speak and the lowest kind of samyaktva is reached. The knot is the attack upon us of our inborn likes and dislikes more especially as to convictions regarding conduct (that it is wrong to kill, etc.). When these three processes have been passed through then the three darshan mohaniya karmanas and the four worst degrees, just mentioned are controlled or inoperative.

The worst degree of the four degrees which were mentioned of anger, pride, deceitfulness and greed, is called the anantanubandhi degree. 'An' means no ant means end. anubandhi means bound as cause and effect. The whole word means 'life long effect'. Anantanubandhi anger is that anger which lasts the whole life time.

When the samyaktva is reached or appears mithyatva or delusion is controlled.

Mithyatva (or delusion or false belief or false conviction regarding conduct, e.g. that it would be right to kill) is of several kinds, but can be divided into two, namely

- 1 Avyakta or indefinite mithyatva
- 2 Vyakta or definite mithyatva

There is a class of living beings, with which the universe is packed, so that there is not an inch of space, anywhere where these are not. These living beings are conscious they are very minute, and cannot be seen with eye or microscope, fire will not kill them nor will water they pass through these things without being hurt no human instrument can kill these living beings they can pass through mountains—anything. There are an infinity of these living beings and this is the source whence come the developing and liberated souls. They have an indefinite existence. They are called 'nigoda'.

The mithyatva of these nigoda is avyakta mithyatva or indefinite, it has not taken any shape, whereas, the mithyatva of human beings is shaped and definite. A person has certain views on certain subjects.

The mithyatva in the mithyatva gunasthane or first stage of development, is the definite kind, the indefinite kind is not a stage of development and the nigoda are in that indefinite state of existence, which is the state of existence before development has begun

When once out of the indefinite mithyatva state, the living being never goes back to it, if it goes back to the nigoda state it goes back as a nigoda of a different kind namely, having vyakta or definite mithyatva. There are therefore two kinds of nigoda, one with indefinite mithyatva whose development has not begun and the other kind with definite mithyatva whose development has begun and who are therefore in the first stage of development or mithyatva gunasthana.

The answer to the very natural question which arises here, What starts the development? would be something like this in a whirlpool some bit of stick or paper or other matter may in the surging of the water get to one side and become separated from the rest be caught by the wind, and dried by the sun and so some such thing may happen to a nigoda which would awaken just a spark of the latent potential power of development.

It is also the theory of the Jains that as a soul passes from the embodied to the liberated state, a nigoda comes out and beings development But this does not mean that a nigoda comes out only on such occasions

There are according to the Jain philosophy three kinds of living beings namely (1) those whose nature it is to remain in the embodied state They may be men, animals or other living beings they are content to remain embodied and never wish for nor reach the liberated state (2) There are living beings whose nature it is to reach liberation (3) and there are living beings whose nature it is to reach liberation but they do not do so, because they do not get the right or necessary circumstances It is understood that these and the first kind are very few in number and it is no misery to them to remain in the embodied state

Very few in number, and it is no misery to them to remain in the embodied state

The following is another division of living beings It is a division by dichotomy

Souls

The approximate English translation of the words in the above list is as follows

Sansari (adjective), means those living beings who are in an embodied state

Siddha [all these words are adjectives modifying living being] This word means those who have reached the liberated state

Sayogi those embodied ones who have not stopped the activities of body, mind and speech

Ayogi, those who have done so [This is only a momentary state just before passing to liberation]

Chhadmastha, living beings with imperfect knowledge

Kevali, living beings with perfect knowledge, omniscience

Samohi, those who still have the intoxicating elements (that is the mohaniya karmas & the kashayas)

Amohi those whose moha has disappeared

Udita-mohi, those in whom the moha (in intoxicating elements) is actually seen, working, manifesting

Anudita mohi, those in whom it is under control checked, or at the bottom like mud in a clear brook

Badara-mohi, those who recognise only rough kinds or gross subdivisions of their moha, such as anger, pride deceitfulness, greed etc

Sukshma-mohi, those who recognize delicate or subtle subdivisions, such as more and less intense degrees of anger etc

Shreni rahita rahita means without Those who are without any system of working out their moha (delusion)

Shreni-vanta, those who have a method by which they systematically work out their infatuating or intoxicating or delusion producing elements

Avirati, those who have not yet obtained control over their minds and senses

Virati, those who have obtained a partial control over their mind and senses

Mithyatvi, those who are in the state of mithyatva

Samyaktvi those who are in the state of samyaktva

Granthi abhedī, those who have not yet cut that knot spoken of previously [this knot is cut while in the state of mithyatva]

Granthi-bhedī, those who have cut it

Abhavya those who will not reach liberation

Bhavya, those who will reach it.

This table is read upwards, thus there are abhavya living beings and bhavya living beings, but they are both granthi abhedhi there are granthi-abhedhi living beings and granthi-bhedhi living beings, but they are both mithyatvi there are mithyatvi living beings and samyaktvi living beings, but they are both avratil, and so on up to the top. There are sansan living beings and sidha living beings, but they are both living beings.

As already mentioned all progress depends upon samyaktva, samyaktva having been described as the control of the three darshana mohaniya karmas and the four anantanubandhis. Concentration and philosophy proper cannot be exercised until this state called samyaktva is obtained.

If you are in the state of samyaktva then you will have certain very definite convictions concerning three principles, namely concerning the principle of the Deity, the principle of the Teacher (Guru) and the principle of Dharma. The Deity (right life duty) The Deity, understood in this system of philosophy is the highest ideal that we keep before the mind, and with the object that we may ultimately become like him. It does not mean a Deity who issues laws that must be obeyed or a creator of the universe. One must have an ideal of ideal manhood, that he wishes to attain to, and if not to be attained in the body as the Master was, still to reach the liberated state where all persons are in a state of equality. The attaining to this ideal will be the aim and end.

of all the actions during life, and so if we get a wrong ideal men, then in trying to become so we lead wrong lives. The ideal man should be called the Deity [Deva]. The Deity [Deva] is a person living as a human being in the midst of his brothers and sisters, not his children. There are millions of Devas (The tirthankara is the Master) who were such men, being now in the liberated state (and once liberated the Deity is never again embodied the soul after reaching perfection never again becomes imperfect and an embodied state is an imperfect one)

Now, what is the difference between the Deva or Ashat as understood in this system of philosophy and the Deity as understood in other systems Krishna Buddha Christ, etc etc ?

If you find the following 18 characteristics in him then he is a Deva. Try to test all the so-called Deities as to whether they have these 18 characteristics and then if any is found wanting reject the Deities so-called that is the Jain teaching. If any one of the following 18 characteristics is missing then he is not a Deva —

1. The antaraya karmas must all have disappeared in him, because so long as there is any antaraya karma in a person that shows that that person may be willing to do a right thing and still is not able to do it it shows that in his nature

there is still some kind of weakness, therefore he cannot be an ideal of perfection. There are 5 antaraya karmas, and so that makes the first 5 characteristics

6 Laughing and joking must have disappeared, because when some unfamiliar object will produce laughing, it shows a lack of knowledge, and that shows that the jnanavaraniya karmas are not fully worked out, but in the Deva or Arhat it is fully worked out and therefore there is nothing unfamiliar to him. If laughing is produced by some new peculiar relationship of ideas, it would show a lack of knowledge

7 He has no liking for this that, and the other thing that is, for material objects he might say 'You can keep them. It makes the person an unhappy person when he likes a thing and has to go without it

8 He has no positive dislike for anything because dislike is also the cause of misery

9 He is not afraid of anything. Fear has disappeared from him. Weakness and lack of knowledge cause fear. There is fear for the loss of one's body, there is fear for the loss of one's reputation, property, fame, popularity etc. only when these are identified with the self and such fear shows that the person considers these things property, reputation, embodied life, etc. to be the factors of his being he has not realised that his real self is different from these things, his goods, his emotions, his physical body, his reputation, etc. and that his real self cannot be injured by any of these losses. Fear for the loss of these things implies that he thinks that those things are the factors of his being (whereas they are not he can live independently of them) that they are his self, and that if they are destroyed, he is destroyed with them. An Arhat would not have fear with regard to anything. Fear shows lack of knowledge and weakness.

Here was given a train of reasoning by which we may know that the soul must and does exist. Matter is indestructible. If the state called knowledge can be proved to be different (which of course it can) from motion of matter, not only in degree but in kind, as the attributes of black, etc., are attributes of objects, so the attribute of 'knowing' and the attribute of morality or mode of behaviour must be the attributes of some real thing—call it soul, self, ego, individual, or what not. And as matter cannot be destroyed, so this soul cannot be destroyed. And it is not a compound, it is a unit always itself. It must exist for ever. That it will exist always in some state or other is the essential of a reality. It is one of the natures of a reality to exist.

10 He has no feeling of disgust or sense of repulsion. The reason would be that the sense of disgust produces a kind of misery and in the ideal man there must be no misery also there is no sense of disgust when it is known that the object of disgust could only exist in those conditions if there is disgust it is because only one or two of the aspects of the object are considered, if all the aspects are known then there is not any disgust and so if there is any sense of disgust it shows lack of knowledge, and in the Arhat or Deva or Deity there must be no lack of knowledge

11 You do not find sorrow Sorrow is a misery He may have compassion

12 Sexual passion or lust has disappeared entirely, because in that state a person will do all kinds of wrong things to gratify the passion

13 His attitude of belief and convictions is correct he is not in any state of intoxication or delusion All signs of greed, anger, killing etc must have gone He has dismissed mithyatra

14 Ignorance has gone and therefore he is Omniscient

15 He never goes into the state of sleep If there is any hitch in the continuity of his consciousness then he is not an Arhat

16 He has a perfect control over his desires over any desire to please the eye, or the ear, or the tongue or the sense of touch

17 He has no attachments to things or persons He would never say "You cannot take it, it is mine" (This characteristic refers more to persons, while the 7th refers more to things)

18 He has no hatreds of persons or things He does not think "I do not want anything to do with that person "

The person who has obtained the samyaktva has the conviction that such a person and such a person alone is my God, in the sense of an ideal man (not as creator), and this is a strong conviction of which he is quite sure without any wavering The samyaktva spoken of so far is called Upashamika samyaktva The upashamika means that the karmas mithyatva mohaniya and the four ananta-nubandhis are controlled (not removed)

The person who has obtained the samyaktva The Teacher would have certain convictions regarding what sort of a man could be his teacher He would have the conviction that the only kind of person who can teach the truth in the absence of the Deva or Arhat is one who has the below mentioned characteristics Unless a person has the following qualifications he cannot be the right kind of teacher, able to teach us the truth —

is convinced that he cannot be the right kind of teacher able to teach us the truth,—if he uses all sorts of false politeness he is not a man able to teach the truth

Dharma means the body of rules of conduct

Dharma. It does two things It prevents a living being from falling down spiritually, and it helps him to go up spiritually These rules apply to all living beings not only to man All living beings are social, and these rules have something to do with a living being's relationships with other living beings Our own development only takes place by reason of our actions and life in relation to other living beings The ultimate object of all these rules so far as they are social must come to this that we must do some good to our fellow beings The object is that we may be able to do some good to the people around us The basis of these rules is pity, compassion, love, doing good, benevolence, kindness, etc [called daya]

'Daya' can be manifested in many ways, and we want to know them, daya being the foundation of the rules

One of the ways in which daya would be shown would be that he would follow the good ways of his family, for instance, in not killing flies, etc This is called dravya daya—the right action 'without' knowing why, that is to say, when the internal attitude of mind is not active

A second way in which daya would manifest itself, would be that we should feel a desire that other living beings should develop their spiritual nature, the previous way mentioned simply protected the bodily welfare. Here the desire is to do good to the soul of the other living being. This form is called bhava daya.

Sva daya A third way in which daya shows itself. Sva means 'one's own'. It is a feeling of pity for the soul that it should have been so long that is for all past time in the deluded state of mithyatva—this pity comes after the sinnyaktia has been experienced and in consequence of this feeling of pity he takes care to remain aloof, from the pains and pleasures of life letting them come and go without identifying his own self with them. He gets to know that these bodily pains and pleasures are enemies to and obscure the bliss quality of the real self.

Para daya Para means others. This is a love for others, but the difference between this and the dravya daya is that, the para daya is the result of thought, whereas you were simply born into the dravya daya and followed it blindly. Here the thought is "I do not like pain or misery therefore other people or other living beings animals, birds, etc, would not, and therefore I shall endeavour to avoid inflicting any pain or misery upon them "

Svarupa daya Is a refraining from injuring other living beings because you wish to obtain a pleasurable condition, such as that of the devas (not Deity, but the beings in the pleasurable deva state) You believe that by not killing or hurting, you will reach a pleasurable condition, and for that reason, you do not kill or hurt This is good, but not the highest daya

Anubandhi daya Literally means daya in the result and not in the beginning It is, for instance, telling anyone something unpleasant, in order that they may come to their senses, but there is no vindictiveness or anger in this anubandhi daya if the correction arises from anger it is not daya The real desire here, is to benefit the other person If there is any feeling of revenge or hate then it is not daya

That makes six ways in which daya shows itself

The person in the state of samyaktva is convinced that only a body of rules which is based on daya is true dharma or true conduct rules true religion, or the right law of life, and that no other body of rules such as one that is based on killing animals for sacrifices, can be a right one. And it is a strong conviction, about which there is no wavering.

After reaching this state of conviction with regard to the deity, the Master and Dharma, a person may feel doubtful or unsteady on the subject not so as to destroy the virtue of samyaktva, but to soil it, so to speak. It may be compared to injuring the body and not killing it. The things which soil the samyaktva are called aticharas and the following five are given:

1. Shanka, means doubt. This would be the first transgression of samyaktva. You may doubt the truth of some of the statements of the philosophy, but this doubt is that which comes after having once been convinced of the truth of the statement. The doubt called samshaya mithyatva (under causes) is a doubt experienced before ever having experienced the conviction of the truth of a statement.

When a statement is heard or read (this refers of course more particularly to philosophical and religious matters) instead of saying "It may or may not be true" the fact should be recognised that the inability to understand the statement, is due to weakness which will in time disappear.

2 Akanksha It is the state of mind which argues that because a person can do wonderful things or so-called miraculous things, that therefore such person can make true statement., with regard to truth and life and the universe The fact is that, rogues and rascals are able to do wonderful things just as can good men But the fact that the man can do miraculous things is no proof that he can make true statements with regard to truth

3, Vitigichchha This is the third mode of wavering from samyaktva It is when after having followed the religion for a length of time and then illness, or suffering, or losses, or disasters come upon you, you blame the philosophy and doubt its efficiency The truth of the philosophy must not be blamed, but the cause of the suffering should be looked for, in past actions

4 Mithyatva-prashanes Literally means praise of any one, who is in mithyatva The feeling that he fakirs, who do all manner of absurd things must be very wonderful people with a true religion, also the admiration of abominable persons who can be proved to be following wrong lives Napoleon Armour Butchers etc

5 Atiparichaya Literally means too much familiarity. It means the feeling towards a bosom friend that you can not do without him (or her) &c, must always be with him, etc. It causes you to get into his way of life and so you soil your samyaktva.

When a person is convinced as above described regarding the Deity, the Teacher and the Dharma he naturally makes a vow, that he will not fall into these transgressions or waverings from such convictions.

Also it follows that, anyone having these convictions will test and criticise any person claiming to be a Deity, or a Teacher, and if any of the 18 or the 5 characteristics above mentioned, are found wanting he will reject such person as not being fully to be relied upon. This applies also to the clergy and other persons claiming to be spiritual teachers.

It is stated that the last Arhat whose name was Mahavira, and whom history describes possessed the 18 characteristics mentioned. It is in the history of the Jain people that this is to be found.

All the liberated or perfected living beings have become so by reason of their own efforts, in an evolution from the mūḍa state.

The following are five signs or characteristics of samyaktva, and from them we may know by our own inner thoughts what our attitude is towards the universe in which we find ourselves, and whether or not we are in the state of samyaktva. They are internal signs, so that each can test himself.

1 Upashama, is a mental state when the strong intoxicating *karman*s or the lasyas like anger, greed, etc., are suppressed or controlled. And the suppression has taken place either naturally because the karma is exhausted, or else by thinking on the matter and realizing that after all, by being engrossed in the worst anger, greed, etc., we fall to such a depth that it takes a long time to come up again. If the suppression comes naturally, it is because the person has done the work before.

2 Samvega [noun] is a desire to reach the state of liberation.

3 Mhveda is a recognition that this continual going on from incarnation to incarnation is not the right state of life. You look upon this or any embodied state as a misery and one to get away from. There is always the pain of birth and death.

4 Anulampa, is compassion for those who are suffering from any kind of misery. If the misery is due to their own ignorance and foolishness, then there is still pity for them that they should be thus ignorant. (It is the duty of society to lessen the extent of suffering which exists among them.)

5 Astikya, is the conviction that, that only is the true dharma that has been taught by the Arhats, or persons in whom the 18 above named failings are absent. The conviction that only such a person can give a code of rules of life

Dravya—Bhav

Vyavahara—Nishchaya

These two pairs of terms, which are terms of relationship the first implying the thought about the other will be required later on, and their meaning is therefore given now as follows —

Dravya means literally the material out of which a thing is made. For instance, clay which was going to be made into a teacup, would be correctly called a dravya teacup. Mr Smith, of London, if in his next incarnation, were going to be a butcher, would be correctly called a dravya butcher. Krishna, who is to be one of the future Arhats, might have been correctly called a dravya Arhat, while he was alive on earth. The previous state of the actual state is the dravya state. It always precedes the actual state in time.

The actual teacup would be the bhava teacup, the actual butcher would be the bhava butcher, the actual Arhat would be the bhava arhat. The actual state is the bhava state the state going on, visible. It always comes after the dravya state.

Vyavahara, is related to the word nishchaya. Vyavahara prefixed to any state means the visible signs that you see. And it is necessary as illustration. Vyavahara dharma, for instance, is the visible conduct of the man. It impresses upon the minds of people who see it the truth of the conduct. The description, which a man makes either for himself or to other people, of his Deva, of his Teacher, or of his rules of conduct would be the vyavahara deva, vyavahara guru, vyavahara dharma. Such description of devaship is like the peg on which, on account of weakness, the thoughts must be hung. Vyavahara leads to nishchaya. But still it does not necessarily precede in time the nishchaya.

Nishchaya, is the term related to vyavahara. It is the real internal state that ought to accompany the vyavahara acts. For instance, the nishchaya deva would be the internal condition or the realization of the conviction that, there is in me the potentiality of becoming the Deva, I have described.

Applying these two terms vyavahara and nishchaya, dharma is to be defined from these two points of view. Vyavahara dharma is the action in accordance with the rules prescribed or taught by Arhats and accompanied always by dāya or bhāda always upon daya, which is a fellow feeling for other living beings, and vyavahara dharma in order to be vyavahara dharma must become the cause of nishchaya dharma. The love, compassion, sympathy pity, etc must accompany the practice of the rules, otherwise the practice is mere hypocrisy.

Nishchaya dharma would be the purity of the soul which results from the above mentioned pure action, and the sign of this purity of the soul is that the dirt of karma disappears (karma is a foreign element in combination with the soul). And the fruit of this purity of soul is samyaktva and other higher stages up to liberation. This purity of soul comes out from the action, from the vyavahara dharma.

Dharma is not a something separate from the man. The rule is the man's idea, and the idea is part of or an aspect of the man. Dharma is nothing apart from the man. It is the state or action (State or Knowledge mode of behaviour) of the man.

Classification of Dharma

Dharma can first be divided into (1) the lay man's, and (2) the monk's.

Leaving the dharma of the monk, the dharma of the layman can be divided into (a) Ordinary or common dharma and (b) special dharma.

money is earned in fair and honest ways, the mind remains in a peaceful state, and the wealth is therefore enjoyed and the religious functions are performed in a fearless way. That is all so far as the present life is concerned. Then so far as the future life is concerned you improve it by the association of virtuous people which you can not get if you earn money dishonestly. They will not come into contact with you. When acquiring money in a foul way the mind is in a foul state and you are generating bad 'karmas' for the future.

These rules are for the beginner. If you wish to paint a photograph and the canvas is soiled you must first clean it. These rules are as it were the cleaning process.

2. The layman should marry, with a person not of the same family or from the same ancestors, and whose character, taste, culture, actions, language etc., are of the same kind.

The idea here is that as the layman has not reached a stage of development where he can control his sex passion, marriage is better than promiscuous indulgence. He should not marry if he can control the sex passion. The reason for having a marriage partner of the same culture etc., is to render misunderstandings and discord or inharmony less likely than otherwise.

3 The lay person should always be cautious of danger spots (a) visible and (b) invisible

(a) Pursuits or pastimes the bad results of which are seen all around us, such as crime, which, we know, takes one to prison &c, lustfully eyeing, other men's wives, gambling, etc

(b) Meat eating, drink, and any pursuit leading to bad results which can be known from thinking and reasoning.

Of these dangerous pursuits a person should be wary, and even afraid

4 The person who wishes to advance in spiritual progress should appreciate the conduct, life and doings of truly experienced persons. He may not be able to act as they do, but he can appreciate the actions

By experienced persons is meant persons who are experienced by reason of having come in contact with the wise. They would always try to do good to people who need to be done good to. They would always be grateful for kindness. They would even give up their own less important business, to do some more important thing for others. They would never malign, slander, or libel. They do not grieve at losses, or get elated at prosperity. They do not use too many words. They do not make enemies through recklessness. They would always fulfil their promises. Such experienced people are called Shishtas.

5. Is with regard to the degree that the sense pleasures should be enjoyed and controlled. The man having been for all time in the past enjoying the pleasures of the senses cannot at once give them up, and therefore some only need to be given up at first and so he may enjoy sense pleasures to a degree commensurate with his business and household duties that is to say he should give up those sense pleasures which conflict with his duties. And he should control all those sense enjoyments which would encourage or feed any of the following six things, namely —

(a) Kama or sexual passion, lust, the lustful eye, in regard to a woman or girl not the man's own Wife. This passion in this form should be conquered.

(b) Krodha must be conquered. It is that emotion which is the cause of hating or injuring done in a rash way. This may be called 'anger' there are the two elements of (1) injury to another, and (2) rashness of the action or speech.

(c) Lobha (greed) must be conquered; it is either or both of the following two modes of being greedy (1) not relieving a genuine case of distress

when you are appealed to or that comes to your notice, you, of course, being able to give the relief

(2) taking property from people in an illegitimate way without any cause or reason not by force but by persuasively getting the person to part with his property Shop people do this when they induce to purchasers to buy goods In theft this consent of the owner is not obtained, in theft the money is taken against the owner's will

(d) Mana [pride] here has a special meaning, it means the non acceptance of the teachings of persons who are actively engaged in attaining the state of liberation, and this non acceptance comes on account of obstinacy You think "I know just as well as he does" and you reject the teaching, without testing or examining it

(e) Mada This is pride or boasting about one's family ancestors, etc about one's strength or physical power about one's greatness (a Lord might think himself a great person), about one's beauty or handsomeness or about one's learning This pride is liable to become the cause of hurt to others if it makes him look down upon others and think that, being a superior being he has the right to tyrannize

(f) Harsha, literally means pleasure, but here it means in a technical sense giving pleasure to the 15 & 16 Keep the company of only per-hearted persons and persons of good conduct and do not keep the company of bad persons The difference here from rule 8 is that this refers to equals rule 8 refers to persons spiritually more advanced

17 Respect the parents The idea is that they have done so much for us that we should return something we should return gratitude If we cannot do this by giving them money we can do so by showing them the right path Had they chosen not to care for us we should have suffered

18 None of the person's actions should be such as to cause unnecessary ill feeling to anybody he should not speak words which would unnecessarily cause ill feeling in the mind of another

19 He should maintain those who are dependent on him that obligation should be fulfilled.
He should assign to them their proper work and should see that they do it right, or else they become harmful to him If they get into vices etc then he should assume such an attitude towards them that they may feel that he knows of their wrong doing He should not ignore wrong doing or let the dependent persons get so vicious that in the condition would lower his wisdom Avoid a person
if very bad do not let him report to you his wrong

20 Despect and render service to the Deva (i e the ideal, or Arhat), to the guest, and to poor deserving people (The Deva has no commands—you take no commands from him)

21 With regard to eating and drinking Eat and drink at the proper time in conformity with the nature of your constitution But under all circumstances give up excessive eating because that particular food is liked by you

22 When you feel that you are getting weak physically adopt the proper remedy for it

53 Do not travel in countries which are full of criminals, or where there are other dangers such as famine, plague earthquake etc The idea is self protection

24 He should not act in such a way as to become unnecessarily hostile to the people, he should live in peace with them (These rules are for the beginner and not for the strong in spiritual quality)

25 With reference to the attitude that he ought to have towards people that are ignorant in a low state of development The action should be such that they would feel that there is a higher life than their own Let them feel the influence of the purer life of honesty for instance

26 He should avoid too much intimacy Do not be too intimate with anybody

27 Render service to those who have taken spiritual vows and who are experienced in the matter of wisdom and knowledge Do some kind of service to them and in that way you appreciate the wisdom and the vows and in time the idea is to become like them (This idea is not appreciated in the Western world the philosophies of the West do not teach this idea) The idea here is that a man is a social being and must live in company of some sort, therefore he should establish certain relationships with the right kind of people in order by that means to become virtuous

28 As with regard to the several objects of life There are four classes of life objects : namely (a) dharma that is to say the practice of these rules—doing good (b) artha, which means the acquisition of the means of enjoyment, i. e. of wealth property etc. (c) kama which here has the broad meaning of 'desire' desire for dress for fame, for a nice house, for writing books—all desires (d) moksha or liberation Seeing that the nature of karma is to obscure some quality of the soul, some fiber of the nature of the soul in the state of liberation may be gained by remembering what particular quality of the soul comes out upon the removal of the eight classes of karma This rule No 28 is that the layman should accept [should have] all these four objects of life, but in such a way that a higher object is not sacrificed for the sake of a lower one, in such a way that there may not be any conflict between them. If there are difficulties in the way so far as kama is concerned then let it go but preserve dharma and artha. The order of these four objects is kama artha dharma moksha the last being the highest.

29 In doing anything always consider your strength and your weakness he should not undertake more than his strength will allow him to carry out.

30 Always attempt to rise higher and higher so far as the objects of life just mentioned are concerned.

31 Do or abstain from doing things that should be done or should not be done (respectively) at the right time. Stop doing a thing if it should not be done at that time.

32 The layman should hear the dharma every day. Or in the absence of a monk he should read or study it himself. The idea is that the practice of all these rules leads the man to the state of samyaktva. (So that having examined himself to see if the signs of samyaktva previously mentioned are in him and finding that he has not attained the state of samyaktva he will know now how to

26 He should avoid too much intimacy not be too intimate with anybody

27 Render service to those who have taken spiritual vows and who are experienced in the matter of wisdom and knowledge Do some kind of service to them, and in that way you appreciate the wisdom and the vows and in time the idea is to become like them (This idea is not appreciated in the Western world the philosophies of the West do not teach this idea) The idea here is that a man is a social being and must live in company of some sort, therefore he should establish certain relationships with the right kind of people in order by that means to become virtuous

28 As with regard to the several objects of life There are four classes of life-objects, namely (a) dharma that is to say the practice of these rules—doing good, (b) artha which means the acquisition of the means of enjoyment i.e. of wealth property etc (c) kama which here has the broad meaning of 'desire' desire for dress for fame for a nice house for writing books—all desires (d) moksha or liberation Seeing that the nature of karma is to obscure some quality of the soul, some idea of the nature of the soul in the state of liberation may be gained by remembering what particular quality of the soul comes out upon the removal of the eight classes of karma. (So that having examined himself to see if the signs of samyaktva previously mentioned are in him and finding that he has not attained the state of samyaktva, he will know now how to attain it, namely by putting ^athese 35 rules of conduct into practice)

33 Avoid, or give up, obstinacy in all things. Obstinacy is here defined as the doing of an immoral, wrong or evil act with the object of hurting, injuring, ^aor defeating another person. He should be yielding and not stubborn.

34 He should be partial for virtues. He should have all his energy directed for it.

35 With regard to opinions, beliefs, philosophies, religion, etc., he should be critical, and reconcile all the questions and solve all the doubts that arise out of this critical attitude.

That is the end of the rules which when practised lead towards the reaching of the state of samyaktva, but the state is not actually reached until the three processes which were mentioned have been passed through. The result attained after passing through these processes is the Aupashamika samyaktva, or that state of samyaktva which is the result of the control of the three darshana mohaniya karmas and the four anantanubandhis.

The nature of the control here spoken of is such that these particular mohaniya karmas do not rise or become active. The man whose anantanubandhi anger is controlled does not get angry in that intense degree.

4th GUNA STHANA

OR

Avirati-samyak-drishhti-guna-sthana

Drishhti means attitude. It is a noun. Samyak is an adjective and means right or proper. Avirati means no control (here it means lack of control except of the anantanubandhis. No control of the sense pleasures and other karmas than the anantanubandhis of the mohaniya division). Guna means quality, and sthana means stage.

All persons in this fourth : guna-sthana have control of the darshana and anantanubandhi mohaniya karmas (or kashayas). Besides this factor, there is the other factor of samyaktva. So the characteristics of this fourth stage are

- (a) Lack of control (of sense pleasures &c)
- (b) right attitude

Kashaya means that which soils

The lack of control here is also lack of control of the sense pleasures. Persons in this stage, while they do not have this self-control, still they do appreciate the value of self-control but through weakness they are not able to practice it. These living beings can be classed under three heads —

1. These (a) know the value of self-control but (b) they do not make the effort to acquire it

5 last kinds of samsthana

Naraka anupurvi

Tiryancha anupurvi

The bad gait karma [vihayo-gati]

Atapa (warm light)

Udyots (cool light or lustre)

Stavara [stationary body]

Sukshma (minute body)

Aparyapta [dies]

Sadharana [common body]

Daurbhogya [unpopular]

Duhsvara (unmusical)

1 Gotra karma

5 Antaraya karmas

making 77 liable to be generated

OR

Desha-virati-samyak-drishti-guna sthana

Desha means 'part or partial, virati means control

In all the guna sthanas above the third there is samyaktva and where there is samyaktva there is control of the darshana mohaniya and of the four anantasubandhis, therefore the partial control here spoken of is of other kashayas, sense pleasures, and karmas than these seven

The factors of the person's state who is in this fifth stage are, therefore [a] partial self-control and [b] samyaktva. The person in this stage is not able to practise complete self control. For instance, he can practise the principle of non-killing in only a partial way.

There is only one class of persons in this stage, they all know the value of self control, they all make the effort to practise it, and they practise it in part.

In this stage there are 39 out of the 57 causes operative. The following are the 18 inoperative causes —

5 Mithyatas

4 Anantanubandhis

The apratyakhyani [four of them, see below]

Avirati regarding moving living beings —

The aharaka yoga

The audarika mishra yoga

The aharaka mishra

The karmana yoga

that makes 18 inoperative causes

The apratyakhyani are the anger, pride, deceitfulness and greed in the degree next above the anantanubandhis, and by reason of the presence or activity of them you are not able to take certain particular vows not to do certain things. And as, in this desha-virati guna sthana these appatyakh yani are partially controlled, you can take the vows of refraining from certain activities

The audarika mishra yoga means the activity of the physical body in the state of incompleteness (aparyapta) when completion is not going to take place. It is only applied to living beings who die before birth.

The aharaka mishra yoga would be any activity of the aharaka body when you were proceeding to make it, but are going to fail in completing it.

When in the karmas 'sharira there cannot be any control. (There is no control in the deva or naraka states.)

The karmas liable to be generated in this stage are —

- 5 Jnanavaraniya karmas
- 6 Darshanavaraniya karmas
- 2 Vedantiya karmas
- 15 Mohantiya karmas
- 1 Ayuh karma [Deva]
- 32 Nama karmas
- 1 Gotra karma
- 5 Antaraya karmas

making 67 liable to be generated out of 122

These are the same as the 4th guna sthana, only the following are not generated --

The apratyakhyani, which makes four less of the mohaniya karmas the manushyayuh karma is not generated in this stage. Of the nama karmas the following 5, as well as the 30 of the previous or 4th stage or guna sthana, are not generated

Manushya gati
 Andarika sharira
 Andarika upanga
 Samhanana (vajra &c)
 Manushyanupurvi

Activity of the physical body does not necessarily generate the physical body

When there is perfect self control there is no question of degrees of self control, but here in this 5th stage the person practises only a partial control over his sense pleasures passions emotions desires, etc, and therefore the question arises as to what extent they practise such control

In this partial control three degrees may be considered

- (1) Lowest,
- (2) Middle,
- (3) Highest

We will take each of these in their order in detail —

Lowest Degree of partial Self-control

In the lowest degree of self-control in the samyaktva state the person would resolve and carry out the resolution, not to destroy any living being having the power of locomotion, intentionally when it is not guilty, and without any special necessary cause

He would give up meat eating and liquor drinking

He would every now and then try to concentrate upon the five great personalities postulated by the Jain philosophy

Middle degree of partial Self control

1 In this middle degree of self-control the person may observe all the 35 rules of ordinary dharma previously given

2 He performs six daily activities

3 He observes the 12 rules of conduct, which may be called vows

4 He would follow the path of rectitude his conduct would be good

Highest Degree of Partial Self-control

1 He would give up all kinds of food which are animated at the time of eating [fruit, raw vegetables]

2 He would eat only once a day (a Jain eats only twice a day—or rather no Jain eats more than twice a day, some eat only once, and some not that)

3 He would practise absolute chastity

4 He would have the desire to adopt the vows of the monk he may not be able to adopt them but still he has the desire to adopt them

5 He retires from business This gives the younger men a chance to come in)

Six daily Activities

Spoken of under the heading of the middle degree of self-control these are the daily activities

1 He would worship the Arhat, or in the absence of the Arhat he would worship the image of the Arhat This needs a little explanation in order that it may be understood One might ask

What is the use of worshipping an image? The methods used in cognizing any insentient thing or living being are of four kinds, namely nama, sthapana (or akriti), dravya, and bhava Nama

the first method, is by giving the name. The mention of the name is sufficient to bring to knowledge the idea of the object. The mention of names has a great deal to do with the rise and improvement of the consciousness, the mention of names is a great factor in those concrete activities which have to do with the progress of man.

Sthapana, the second method by which we cognize things, pay respect to things, look down upon things, etc., is the picture, photograph, diagram, symbol, image, model, statue &c. It is also called akriti, which means literally a drawing, image, or photograph. Absent persons can be worshipped by this means. The fact of the false use of images by the common people must not be taken as a reason for ignoring the philosophical truth that the image is an important factor when its use is rightly understood. Photographs &c., of absent friends can be used as a means of respecting them. Photographs &c., can be used as a means of insulting an absent person [Guy Fawkes, for example] and so also they can be used for respecting and worshipping absent persons.

Dravya, the third method, is [when you wish to respect or cognize or worship a thing or person who has not yet come into existence, you worship the previous state of that thing or person. By paying respect to the present person or thing you can pay respect to the future being or thing. For instance the Indian prince Shrenika is believed to be the soul who is to be the first Arhat of the next cycle, could have been respected and worshipped by using Shrenika in that way.

Bhava, the fourth method of knowing a thing or being or paying respect to them, is by using the actual thing or being or respecting the actual person.

So these are four ways of worshipping the Arhat. When anyone has an ideal, then he respects it, and the idea of the ideal is much strengthened by worshipping. Worshipping the ideal by any of the above four methods strengthens the belief and convictions regarding that ideal. Of course anything which a man looks down upon or ridicules is not his ideal. If he has an ideal he respects it.

2. The second daily thing that a person having the middle degree of self-control in the samvaktva state would do would be to render homage to the teacher (guru).

3. Third, he would study philosophy every day.

4. He would practise some form of self control every day.

5. He would practise some form of austerity (tapas) every day, both physical and internal. Controlling hunger would be a physical one, assuming a posture in concentration would also be a physical one. Concentration would be an internal one. Austerities are not the line of least resistance

6 He would do some kind of charity but not in the sense where the giver is superior to the receiver, both are equal. There must be no idea of superiority [I take it that the reason is because where there is any idea of superiority there is the presence of pride and pride is an intoxicating karma obscuring knowledge and right belief and right action]

VRATAS व्रत

Approximately translated by the English word vows. But an analysis of the vrata is given below so that there will be no ignorance of what the vrata is its content

In this stage of development (the 5th) which is now being described, there is only PARTIAL self-control, and the details already mentioned in the low, moderate and high degrees of partial self-control are for the purpose of showing more definitely what the partial control is. And it is further shown by knowing the 12 vows which a person in this 5th stage of development may take [It should be remembered that these stages of development are not chronological but logical]

The 12 Vratas or Vows

The word 'vrata' is derived from 'vri' which means to select or to choose therefore literally a vrata means a kind of choice. But in the technical or idiomatic sense in which the word is used in the connection now under consideration there is also the meaning of choosing a right course and then there is the implied effort of will in willing to so choose

Choice implies that the person has before him several ways of conduct, and that he picks out one from among them. As it is persons in the fifth stage of development that are now being spoken of, these persons are in the state of samyaktva (and not mithyatva), and this means that their selection will be a right and proper one (persons in the state of mithyatva will not choose the path of rectitude).

The choosing of a right course of conduct among manyways necessitates the exercise of the judgment and discrimination. And doing this is not following the path of least resistance, so that the exercising of the judgment in selecting a right course of conduct as distinguished from living a life where no such choice is made implies an effort of the will force.

So this word vrata in its technical meaning here implies all these ideas, namely

- 1 There is the actual selection of the conduct
- 2 There is the exercise of the judging faculty in distinguishing right from bad courses
- 3 There is the effort of the will [virya], or in psychological language there is conation

There is no such thing as taking a vrata and not carrying it out. It is a very strict matter requiring the exercise of much care in the undertaking to do

This idea of the vrata as above described is peculiarly Jain, there is no promising on oath to a superior deity or person, it is not a command or a decree issued by a deity to his subjects or creatures. The breaking of the vows means degradation, in the Jain philosophy, if a person breaks his vows he is degraded (that is all he is not damned for ever). But the Vedic idea of a vrata is very different (how or in what way different was not given)

The 12 vratas which a lay person (not a monk) can take may be divided into three classes

- 1 The first five are called lesser vratas (anuvratas) which means lesser compared with the vratas of the monk
 - 2 The next three vratas are called guna vratas. Guna literally means virtues but here it means that they give a kind of nourishment to the first five they support and are helpful to the first five
 - 3 The last four are called Shiksha vratas, literally disciplinary. They are such that when you are practising them you are making a preparation for the monk life

FIRST VRATA

First vrata is called in Sanskrit sthula pranatipata-viramana vrata. Sthula means rough or gross as distinguished from strict or subtle. Pranatipata means separating the pranas (life forces). Viramana means giving up. So the name of this vow means choosing to refrain from some killing to refrain from destroying life, but not in a literal or strict sense.

Now the next thing is to know what killing is and then what particular kinds or forms of killing shall be refrained from.

What killing is —

Killing is the tearing as under or separating of the pranas through negligent activities (the word negligent here has a particular technical meaning)

Negligent activities are activities which take place when a person is in a state in which care and caution cannot be used. When a person is in any of the five following states he acts without care or caution, he does not exercise care and caution —

1 Mada, pride, through which a person kills It implies arrogance and is a state which ignores the rights of other living beings

2 Vishaya, sense pleasure which leads to killing

3 Kashaya the kashayas anger, greed, deceit etc, lead to killing in their intense degrees where the reason is lost as in wrath and anger

4 Nidra, sleep We cannot exercise care and caution when asleep and may kill a living thing if it gets in the bed Mothers even kill their babies in this state

5 Vikatha undesirable conversation which leads to passion, lust and excitement of mind, and then to killing Duels for instance fights, and rows

These five kinds of activities are what is meant above by negligent activities

Different living beings have different numbers of pranas (life forces) as follows

Beings with only one organ of sense possess four pranas namely

- 1 Touch
- 2 Respiration
- 3 Force of body
- 4 Duration of life (arab)

Beings which have only these four forces of life are vegetables, trees, water beings, air beings, and fire beings

Beings with two sense organs have six pranas, namely the above four and also

5 Sense of taste

6 Force of speech

They have the means or power of communicating among themselves, which can be called speech
Shell beings, and protozoa

Beings with three sense organs have seven pranas, namely the above six and also —

7 Sense of smell

Ants, lice, bed bugs, are instances of such beings

Beings with four senses have 8 pranas namely the above seven and also

8 Sense of sight

Wasps, bees, scorpions are instances of such living beings

Beings with five senses are of two kinds, the first kind have no mind (manas mind as meant in the Jain philosophy), and these beings have nine pranas namely the above eight and also —

9 Sense of hearing and the second kind have mind as meant in the Jain philosophy and they possess ten pranas namely the above nine and also

10 Force of mind

Beings with all the five senses of touch, taste, smell seeing and hearing, and force of body, force of speech, respiration and life duration (ayuh) are generated by the perspiration of some persons during sleep. These beings with five senses but having no mind are very minute.

We see by the above the order in which the senses are developed. A two sense living being, for instance, never has touch and smell. It is always touch and taste, and so on. The living beings which come under the second kind of five sense beings with mind are men, animals, birds, fish (of course these are only illustrations, not exhaustive lists).

So that when we are in any state in which we do not use care and caution and in that state we tear ~~an~~ under any of these pranas then it is killing. The Sanskrit word for killing thus defined is "hinsa". Hinsa can be done in the naraka (hell) state, but after the separation the pranas come together again, however the pain of dread, anxiety etc., is felt. In the naraka state there is pain all the time, and it may last 10 years or a million years or a billion years. Still it comes to an end. There is also hinsa in the deva state. In the deva state there is more pleasure than pain.

Now with regard to what extent this first vow causes us to refrain from killing, or how much and what kinds of killing the layman may take a vow to refrain from.

In order to steer clear of killing it is well to know the various ways in which killing is done, this can be learned by observation of the conduct of the people, but a few of the ways may here be mentioned

- 1 Hunting, fishing etc
- 2 Vivisection
- 3 The taking of feathers, skins, etc for dress
- 4 Killing for food, meat, game, fish etc
- 5 In war
- 6 For private revenge
- 7 For religious purposes (so-called), as in sacrifices
- 8 Killing insects such as flies gnats, &c because you think they trouble you
- 9 Capital punishment etc etc

For the sake of illustration the following analysis is made of the state of mind of a person who is hunting for sport. There are three factors [a] in this state of mind there is no thought about the pain and harm the person hunting is inflicting on the innocent creature hunted (b) the person is entirely taken up with his own pleasure, (c) he has no feeling for the pain and suffering of the animal. So we have three factors, namely, thoughtlessness regarding the pain inflicted, selfishness, and heartlessness

With regard to vivisection, it is done for the purpose of gaining certain physiological knowledge. But, first, we have no right to obtain knowledge at the expense of other living beings and, second, our lack of knowledge is due to a knowledge obscuring karma and if we will remove it we shall have the knowledge without injuring the living beings. In the Jain idea of morality relationships with all living beings are considered, and not merely relationships with man.

Now from the point of view of how much killing a layman can avoid living beings can be divided into

- 1 Those having the power of locomotion,
- 2 Stationary trees etc

and the layman cannot take a vow to refrain from killing the stationary ones.

Now for the sake of comparing the protection to life afforded by a layman with that afforded by a monk, we may represent full protection by the number 16. Therefore in this first division (to speak roughly) the layman's protection to life would be only half that afforded by the monk.

Now taking the killing of moving living beings how much can the layman avoid? There is killing them

1 With determined intention, where he thinks yes, I want to kill them and I am killing them '

■ Killing them in household and personal matters, cooking, digging foundations etc The layman cannot undertake to refrain from the latter kind of killing and so again the protection to life as compared with the monk is reduced to 4

Another point is that the beings which are killed with determined intention may either be

1 Innocent or

2 Guilty so far as your interests are concerned, and the layman cannot say he will not kill the guilty ones A lion is guilty if he attacks you also so is a burglar So again the protection to life is reduced to 2

Disregarding the guilty living beings we must now consider which of the innocent ones he can refrain from killing Men when they kill innocent living beings intentionally do so either

1 Without a proper necessary cause or

2 For a proper necessary purpose

The layman cannot undertake to refrain from the intentional killing of innocent beings when there is a proper necessary cause for doing it And so again the protection to life is reduced to 1. Therefore the protection which a layman can undertake to afford to life is in comparison with that afforded by the monk, as 1 is to 16.

The layman, then, can undertake to refrain from killing innocent moving living beings intentionally when he has no proper necessary cause. So the

FIRST VOW OF THE LAYMAN

is 'I shall not kill a moving living being with determined intention when it is innocent, without a proper necessary cause or purpose.'

Virtues and vices are states of the individual and Incidental can never be transmitted or transferred from one person to another. Each person develops his own state of virtue, just as he does his own knowledge. You cannot impart virtue to another person; you cannot inherit virtue (in the sense of receiving it). You cannot inherit knowledge or impart knowledge. You can supply a person with the means (such as books or lectures) whereby he can develop his own knowledge.

long life he will have a good name, handsome features and a youth-time that would be enjoyable. The results of killing would be the opposite of these things, such as lameness, some incurable disease, separation from friends and relations, sorrow, short life, misery, and after that an incarnation in the low state [naraka]

It is the Jain idea that kings, emperors, rulers, queens, etc., go to the naraka state after this life as a general rule, of course there may be exceptions. The reason is that during their life they ignore the rights of others to such an extent.

Just incidentally mentioned here—it is the mohaniya karmas which cover up the heart. The heart is covered up by the mohaniya karmas.

SECOND VRATA

It is called in Sanskrit Sthula-mishavada-vramana vrata.

Vada means telling, mish means false hood.

The vow therefore means the resolution to refrain from telling gross false hoods.

Sthula or gross false hoods are those in which there is an evil intention and a long life of the speaker is false.

The following are illustrations of kinds of falsehoods

1 Kanyalika, literally falsehoods relating to young girls but it is chosen to represent human beings. So one kind of falsehood is falsehood told about another person or persons

2 Govatika literally means falsehood relating to cows. It is used to represent any animals. Therefore another kind of falsehood is falsehood told about animals (such as when trying to sell them)

3 Bhumyalika falsehoods relating to footless property, such as ground or goods

4 Nyasa-nimbava means denying that you have received it when money or other deposit has been left with you

5 Kuta sakshyam, means giving false evidence either in or out of court

These five kinds are sthula or gross forms of falsehood, as distinguished from subtle falsehoods

Four Classes of Falsehoods

- 1 The denial of a fact To deny that a thing exists
- 2 The affirmation of that which does not exist

- 3 The thing may be one thing and you call
It another You may call a cow a horse
- 4 A statement that is injurious to others either to the person to whom it is made or to other persons Such as "Go and steal" "Well, Mr blind man, how do you do" To make a statement (even a true one) which is injurious is false or wrong when made without proper right cause Also under this kind of falsehood can be classed false names "You silly goose"

Causes

Lies and falsehoods are spoken by reason of certain states of mind certain states of mind are forces which impel to the speaking of falsehoods these states are —

- 1 Anger when in anger you make false statements [they may be true, but injurious], and even say tell intentional lies when angry
- 2 Pride
- 2 Deceitfulness
- 4 Greed
- 5 False attachment
- 6 False aversion—hatred
- 7 Laughing and joking

8 Fear All nations that are under the control of other nations tell lies through fear Any form of slavery induces lies

9 False politeness

10 Sorrow We ignorantly blame others when we are in sorrow

These causes may impel to the telling of such lies as are not possible to be avoided by the layman, it is only gross falsehoods that he undertakes to avoid

So the second vow would be something like this "I shall refrain from telling falsehoods about any person animal, or thing, knowingly and with the intention of injuring some one ' or stronger 'I shall not with predetermination tell a falsehood when I am conscious of the injury it will do", or ' I shall not knowingly and intentionally make a false statement that will be injurious to others", or "I shall refrain from telling gross lies "

Further, the vow may be taken in several ways for instance "I shall observe this vow only in speech, and not mentally and bodily" or ' I shall observe it only bodily or it can be taken to avoid only mental falsehoods (Writing lies would be an instance of bodily lies there is no speech but there is bodily activity)

Incidentally—in psychological combinations the result is different from either constituent or factor

The Aticharas

The following are illustrations of the ways of partially transgressing this vow

1 Sahasabhyakhyana literally means a rash and false accusation. If you rashly call a man a thief when he is not

2, Mithyopadesha here means giving an improper order that is injurious or harmful to others. Literally it means false instruction. If it is made intentionally then it is an anachara; it must be rashly or carelessly made in order to be only an atichara. If you ask a person to tell a lie doing so carelessly, then it is a partial transgression.

3 Guhya bhashana has two meanings (1) divulging a thing that is secret (2) blackbitching or slandering. And these things must be done unintentionally through carelessness or rashness. If it is done for the Government intentionally then it is anachara.

4 Kuta lekha, literally means making a false document, imitation of other people's writing. Any false document. If the vow is taken as regards the body and not merely I shall not speak a lie.

then making a false document is a breach of the vow, because you have made a false document, but it is only a breach when done intentionally and knowingly. If it is done rashly and you do not enquire into the matter then it is only atichara.

5 Vishvasta-mantra bheda divulging the secrets of friends, wife, etc. This disclosure leads to the shame, perhaps, of the friend and it is harmful to him, hence there is breach.

As already mentioned under vow No 1 these vows are taken internally and externally, and if the action falls short of the external breach but does not fall short of the internal breach then it is called a partial transgression or atichara, because the internal part is transgressed. And in the foregoing illustrations the fact that the internal part is transgressed is to be seen in the fact of the rashness and injury that accompany the action. These vows are undertakings to exercise self control and to refrain from injuring others and when there is rashness or carelessness and injury in an action then the vow is not fully carried out. And because there is both rashness (or carelessness) and injury to others the above mentioned illustrations are aticharas even if the actual words spoken are true.

Fruits

The fruit that you reap by observing this now is

5 The person does away with reason at the time

6 It is the opinion of the Jain philosophy that the plans, ideas, intentions, and schemes of a person who is full of excessive passion do not bear fruit [or if they do it is owing to the working of a karma] His mind is all the time on beautiful women he cannot have self control and concentration of mind

7 The success of the control of nature's finer forces that are not generally known depends upon chastity

8 The success of mantras also depends entirely upon chastity It is not the vibrations of sound only which give effectiveness to a mantra, your mental activity, your views and your whole life all go to produce a compound vibration which can be sent to and felt by a being in the higher realms The mental state is more important than the vibration of sound

9 There are a number of worldly disadvantages from the excessive exercise of the sex passion you lose and squander your money if you go with many women you lose sight of your better desires you cannot perform good actions you lose respect for your superiors you lose faith in scriptures, you cannot go to the Deva state after death, etc etc

10 The science of breath teaches that in every activity you have to use the forces of the subtle (not the ordinary) breath. And in this science all forces are measured by the number of subtle breaths you spend. The force which one uses in the following activities is shown by the number of breaths expended and is greatest in the sexual act, and least in spiritual concentration.

If in spiritual concentration four breaths are spent, then in exercising good thoughts you spend 6 breaths, in sitting in silence 10, in speaking, 12, in sleeping, 16, in walking 22, in sexual intercourse 36. This is the Jain view—and it is the subtle and not the ordinary breaths.

The action of sexual reproduction, or more correctly called the action of satisfying the sex passion, is very injurious to the individual, injurious to his own soul, binding it with karma and rendering it impure, causing ignorance and consequent misery.

The sex passion having been defined as subtle and gross, and some information given concerning it, the next thing is to know man's relation to the sex passion; and in view of the kind of thing which it is namely an injurious thing, it should be controlled and avoided so we now consider only undertakes to keep away from the wives of others, he does not then undertake to keep away from prostitutes, etc

NINE RULES

Knowing, or being convinced of the usefulness of the restriction placed upon himself he can help himself to keep the vow by paying attention to the following nine points. They may be called hedges, to keep one-self away from self injury in the direction of sex passion

1 Try to live in a building where there are no female animals or neuter living beings, and live in such a way that you do not have physical contact all the time with a woman because it excites the passion

2 Try not to indulge in lustful stories or conversations or talks about woman

3 The person who has taken the fourth vow should try to avoid sitting on a seat for at least an hour after it has been occupied by a woman, because the vibrations are left there and they excite the passion. Sitting on a seat or any place is meant,

4 He should not look with a lustful eye or in the spirit of lust on those parts of a woman's body which are factors in arousing the passion

5 He should not remain in a room next to one in which a man and wife are in bed together if the wall is thin enough for him to hear or know or guess what is going on, because it will arouse thoughts of passion

6 He should not bring to mind the sexual enjoyment he had with his wife in former days

7 He should avoid taking foods which are exciting or intoxicating, or stimulating, especially things that are very oily, containing too much fat, because they produce passion

8 Even non exciting and non stimulating food should not be taken in excess, he should not gorge himself, because a too great quantity of food will produce passion

9 He should not embellish his body

All the foregoing remarks apply equally to woman although they are worded for men

Aticharas

1 For a person who has taken the second part of the vow to have intercourse with any girl or woman who is not the wife of somebody would be to soil the vow

2 And so it would if such a person hires a woman for a time

3 Dwelling upon the desire or intercourse or gratifying the desire in any unnatural or any artificial way, these are partial transgressions, they are crimes against his own soul

4 Giving away another person's daughter in marriage or helping or causing another person to get married This is transgressing because you are doing things which further the act or exercise of sex passion, which passion is the basis of marriage

5 Intense desire for sexual intercourse Put this in from a different point of view from the third illustration. Here it means constantly looking at woman with that lustful eye It would also include continuing in the act after it is over And it would include a person who tries all sorts of medicines to make him strong if his sex passion is feeble

FIFTH VRATA

Sthula-parigraha-parimāṇa vrata Sthula means gross, parigraha means acquiring as one's own that is possession Parimāṇa means limitation Therefore the vow means a choice to put a limit to the things you possess or will possess and in an ordinary way

It is the limitation of the desire of possessing, and hence of actual possessing. A person may possess without desiring to possess.

To limit the desire is to partially control the desire, if the desire is uncontrolled it is limitless. To satisfy this desire for possession you have to be engaged in some kind of activity, and this activity is such that karman are generated. Desire for things which are not yourself is here meant. A desire for knowledge is not meant. The real self is different from things, and is different from the body, and when this is realised it will be seen that the desire to possess, which is the false identification of the real self with material things, must be removed. And if this realisation is very strong the person will adopt full control, but if he cannot do the full control he can limit his desires. Avirati (non-control) is the same thing as limitless desire. It means lack of control, and the desire is called lobhcha.

Fruits

The result of limiting the desire is contentment, discontent and happiness cannot go together. Non-limitation of desire is the same thing as unsteadiness, it is like the butterfly life. So long as there are these desires you have to wander from incarnation to incarnation. A desire for right knowledge is a desire for getting away from material things (from the possession of them) Knowledge is yourself, is the very nature of the soul

Old method of classifying property into things —

1 Which can be sold by number, such as apples, melons.

2 Which can be sold by weight, such as sugar, drugs

3 Which can be sold by measure, such as oil, milk.

4 Which can be sold by testing, such as gold, silver

5 Different kinds of grades of property, such as land, buildings, metals, animals

Aticharas

The aticharas of this vow are all based upon the above classification. You limit the quantity you will possess, as your own, and if you keep more than the specified quantity you break the vow; and subterfuges etc would be considered as partial transgressions. For instance, when you become in possession grain beyond the limit fixed by you if you keep the excess part somewhere else with somebody else, for a time, that is subterfuge. Or marking a gold ring into a tie pin because your number of gold rings is reached, that is subterfuge

These first five vratas are the minor vratas, previously mentioned. They are so in comparison with the more strict vows of the monk.

The next three are the guna vratas, they help and support the first five.

GUNA VRATAS

Sixth vow

Dig-parimana vrata Dig means direction. The vow means the choosing to determine the distance up to which and not beyond which you will go or send your men. The limitation of the area in which you will live including all directions or motion, up, down, etc.

In all activities of a layman there is destruction of life and therefore when he fixes his area he proclaims to all things beyond that area that he shall not injure them. This vow helps the first and also the other anuvratas.

If we will work out the knowledge obscuring karmas we can know of the things going on abroad without actually going there (compare the avadhi means of knowing in the early part of the karmas).

4 Driving or plying other people's vehicles either as a servant, or hired

5 Blasting rocks, digging mines, ploughing etc

6 Ivory business necessitating the killing of elephants

7 Lac, or any similar substance Insects get caught in it

8 Liquids, for the same reason

9 Poison

10 Fur, hair

11 Milling or water-pumping, fish get killed in large quantities

12 Castrating

13 Burning or cutting green forests fields etc

14 Drying lakes ponds, or reservoirs the fish are killed

15 Bringing up women for immoral purposes, or animals for any cruel purpose in order to make money

Partial Transgressions

Eating food that contains animate beings, etc.
(see Tattvarthadhigama Sutra, chapter 7, verse 30
Of Yogasastra, III, 97)

Elighth Vow,

(Anarthadanda-viramana vrata)

The Sanskrit name of this vow consists of five words the first of which is a negative, the second means profit, benefit, motive aim, object, necessary reason purpos , etc , the third word in the name means evils or bad effects and the last two words mean undertaking to refrain from

So this elighth vow is an undertaking not to incur unnecessary evils

We bring unnecessary evils upon ourselves to no purpose, by indulging in thoughts, words, and deeds in which there is no benefit to society, to our friends, or to ourselves

A layman cannot avoid the evils entailed by his necessary pursuits but he can undertake to avoid the evils entailed by unnecessary pursuits and activities such as thinking about, speaking about, or otherwise busying himself with matters that do not concern him or in which there is no benefit

The following are some of the ways in which we do things in which there is no benefit:—

Constantly fearing the loss of any of the good things we have,—wealth, friends, health

Constantly fearing that bad things which we are at present without, may come upon us, pain, poverty disease

Undue anxiety to get rid of disease, poverty, etc , when once they are upon us

Undue anxiety for the future craving for the enjoyment of happiness expected to come in the future

Being glad at having killed something or somebody, or approving of others who have done so speaking ill of or misrepresenting others, and boasting about it

Desiring the death of someone in order to inherit his or her property or cheating people and boasting about it

Distrusting or wishing the death of others for the sake of the safety of our own property

Giving gratuitous advice about matters that are no concern of ours

Lending dangerous weapons gratuitously, like guns, or implements which in their use destroy life —fishing tackle, garden tools

Sheer carelessness of thought, word and action such as drinking excessive sensuous indulgence, things done, said or thought through extreme anger, pride, deceitfulness or greed, excessive sleep, and also talk about matters which do not concern us, such as wars between other countries talk about woman's bodily charms about good dinners, and about kings

By taking this eighth vow we use a means of guarding ourselves against many evils which we might otherwise incur to no purpose

Transgression

1 Gestures that arouse the sex passion (Kandarpa)

2 Antics tomfoolery (Kantkuchya)

3 Obtaining and keeping things that are not necessary for our worldly welfare (Bhogopabhoga Atireka)

4 Overtalkativeness [Maukharya]

5 Leaving dangerous instruments ready for self-use more than are necessary, for lending the use of such instruments to others etc., etc , Samyukta adhi karana)

Ninth vow.

(Samayika)

This is the first of the disciplinary vows (Siksha-vrita) It is a vow by observing which one gets equanimity It consists in thinking about the permanent self or in reading true philosophy or scriptures or in lamenting the wrongs one has done and strengthening the resolution not to repeat the wrong in future Also revering the Master by recounting his merits The time taken should be forty-eight consecutive minutes, predetermined and the vow should be taken to practise it a definite number of times a year, 12 times 52 times, once a day, or some definite time,

The general idea of this vow is to sit in a certain place and read or meditate on holy subjects.

Partial Transgressions *

Misdirection of mind speech or body during the time of meditation This is the mind, the speech, or the body must not occupy itself with other subjects than the one in hand

Practising the vow in a wrong place, that is where there are insects that you might kill while sitting or standing

Forgetting the rites : c, leaving off in say 40 minutes when you have determined upon 48 minutes

Tenth Vow (Dishāvakāshika vrata)

Is reducing to a minimum the space in which we will move. It is undertaking to limit on-self to the space of one house, or one room for a day once a year at least. It is the sixth vow in a more restricted form, in one form it is daily to restrict our movements according to our needs. One should not do anything which is beyond the limit specified.

Partial Transgressions †

Ordering things beyond the limit. Sending someone on some business beyond the limit. Making some sound to attract the attention of some one beyond the limit.

Making some sign to some one beyond the limit to come to you. Throwing something to a person beyond the limit in order to attract his attention.

Eleventh vow (Paushadhopavāsa vrata)

The eleventh vow is the same as the ninth but continued for twelve or twenty-four hours and accompanied by some fasting. By fasting we remove impurities. If the vow is taken it must be practised at least once a year. If food is taken at all on the day of fasting it should not be between sunset and the following sunrise. It is usual to keep to one place, do no business and drinking nothing or eat nothing for twelve, twenty four, thirty-six, forty-eight or seventy-two consecutive hours once a week once a month, or at least once a year.

Partial Transgressions *

- 1 The first of these refers more to India or any hot country. It is not being particular to avoid killing insects by one's clothes or one's bedding and
- 2 not taking something to clear away whatever insects there may be.
- 3 Not being particular to avoid killing anything in performing the offices of nature.
- 4 Despising the ceremony itself.
- 5 Forgetting any of the necessary things to be done in this vow.

Twelfth Vow

(Atithisamvibhāga vrata)

"Atithisamvibhāga" vow. Atithi means a guest and samvibhaga means to distribute, share with. The vow is an undertaking to invite some Jain monk for in the absence of a monk some respectable Jain layman, or in the absence of both, to do so in thought) on the day following the fast undertaken in the previous vow, or whenever opportunity offers to partake of some of the food about to be eaten, without informing the guest of the vow to do this and only the things which are partaken of by the monk should be eaten at the time. It is things which are necessary for life that are partaken of and books, clothing, medicines etc. as well as food, may be offered to the person invited.

This vow if taken, must be practised at least once a year.

Partial Transgressions *

Offering food with life in it to a monk. Fruit, for instance, not cut. After fifty minutes of being cut, fruit is considered to contain no life constituting the body of the fruit.

Putting living things among food which is free from life for instance putting fresh cold water, which has life, with water that has been boiled. In the Jain belief fresh cold water is a mass of living substance, and not merely the home of minute life or animalcules.

Giving the food etc., in a grudging spirit.

Saying that something which the monk may have asked us for and which we do not wish to give belongs to a friend or some one else.

*Tattvarth, S VII 31 Yogassast 2, III, 118

Inviting the monk at a time which we know to be after he has taken his meal

That is the end of twelve special rules for helping to change ourselves from what we actually are ignorant mistaken weak, injurious beings to what we potentially are according to the teachings of those Masters who have developed their spiritual qualities to perfection and have attained omniscience in the flesh. The rules are based upon a certain foundation or character already developed, kindness of heart, self-control, desire for right knowledge, and relish of truth, the internal attitude accompanying the external visible practice of the rules. These rules bring out further knowledge, increased strength of character, greater peace of mind sympathy and kindness and lead to higher levels on the way towards an everlasting, blissful omniscience in a state of life which is natural to the real pure self and which is open to all who wish to attain it

Sarva-virati-guna-sthāna, otherwise called Pramāda-guna sthāna

Sarva' means complete Virati means control

Therefore sarva virati-guna-sthana' is that Guna-sthana' or stage of development where one has attained the quality virtue of complete control over the four 'Kashāya' viz, (1) Anger (2) Pride, (3) Fraudulence and (4) Greediness

Not laymen but monks only who have renounced the world have complete control over these 'Kashayas' or passions therefore they (the monks) have reached this stage They thereby can and do observe the five so-called Mahā vrta or strict vows which are as follow —

(1) Prāṇāhpita viramana vrta or the vow of cessation from killing or destroying life-life of moving beings, as well as of 'stationary' vegetables

(2) Mṛishāvāda viramana vrta or the vow of refraining from telling even a simple untruth

(3) Adattīdāna-viramana-vrta or the vow of refraining from taking anything without being given by its

owner even if it be a trifling straw lying in the street, and which therefore he can pick up at will

(4) 'Maithuna vramana vrata' or the vow of refraining from sexual intercourse and observing strict celibacy. Not only the union but even a touch of the fair sex is enough to soil the vow, and prove one's failure

(5) 'Pana rihā vramana vrata' or the vow of refraining from keeping any property which can be called his own. Thus he [the monk] has no possessions or belongings of his own

There are some nine kinds of property viz (1) wealth (2) grain (3) estate (4) household things (5) gold (6) silver (7) base metals (8) minerals and (9) earth

Even while strictly observing these great vows the monk is yet under the influence of five kinds of passions or negligence and hence this Vara chakra-kuti-vihāra is also termed Pramāda-guṇa-sādhāra

The above-mentioned negligence or other negligent activities are treated to full extent in the next (71) Guna-sādhāra

o

A pramāda—guṇa sthāna

The word pramāda means negligence or carelessness. It is a Sanskrit word which means 'a' means 'not' and 'da' means 'to do' (to do care and caution)

Thus this 7th guna-sthāna is that stage of development where these negligent activities are no more to be seen. Men (not laymen, but monks) are said to have reached this guna-sthāna, when they have wholly abandoned these 'pramādas'.

They are five in number as follow —

I Pride or arrogance, which is in its turn divided into eight kinds, or different forms, viz

Pride with respect to one's	}	a	stout, vigorous body
		b	Handsome form
		c	Abundant riches
		d	Exalted station in life
		e	Severe penances
		f	Vast Knowledge
		g	High caste
		h	Noble birth

II Object of sense (sense pleasures) There are five organs of sense and each organ has its own object. Each of the five objects of the five organs have again different forms. The sum total of these forms is 23.

The five organs are

(a) The Eye the object of which is colour and these colours are five viz red white yellow green & black among which some are to one's liking (agreeable) while some are disagreeable.

(b) The nose the object of which is smell which if fragrant is pleasant to all if bad or stinking disagreeable.

(4) 'Marthana vramana-vrata' or the vow of refraining from sexual intercourse and observing strict celibacy. Not only the union but even a touch of the fair sex is enough to foil the vow and prove one a failure

(5) 'Pangriha vramana vrata' or the vow of refraining from keeping any property which can be called his own. Thus he [the monk] has no possessions or belongings of his own

There are some nine kinds of property viz (1) wealth (2) grain (3) estate (4) household things (5) gold (6) silver (7) base metals (8) minerals and (9) earth

Even while strictly observing these great vows the monk is yet under the influence of five kinds of faults or negligence and hence the vara-vrat gunasthana is also termed Itamisa-guna-ahara

The above mentioned negligence or fault in religious activities are treated to fall external in the next (7) 'Guna-bhaga

or

A-pramāda—guna sthāna

The word pramāda means 'negligence', and vara means 'vow' or 'a religious act'. Hence pramāda-guna, (1) care and caution)

Thus this 7th guna sthāna is that stage of development where these negligent activities are no more to be seen. Men (not laymen, but monks) are said to have reached this guna-sthāna, when they have wholly abandoned these pramādas.

They are five in number as follow —

I Pride or arrogance which is in its turn divided into eight kinds, or different forms viz ,

Pride with respect to one's	}	a	stout vigorous body
		b	Handsome form
		c	Abundant riches
		d	Exalted station in life
		e	Severe penances
		f	Vast knowledge
		g	High caste
		h	Noble birth

II Object of sense (sense pleasures) There are five organs of sense and each organ has its own object. Each of the five objects of the five organs have again different forms. The sum total of these forms is 23.

The five organs are

(a) The eye the object of which is colour and these colours are five viz red white yellow green & black among which some are to one's liking (agreeable) while some are disagreeable.

(b) The nose the object of which is smell which if fragrant is pleasant to all if bad or stinking disagreeable.

(c) The Ear which has for its object sound, the sound being of three kinds viz, (1) that of human beings (which is सचित्त) (2) that of drums &c (which is अचित्त, and (3) that of musical instruments &c., (which is मिथ्य) Among these some so to say of the sound some are agreeable to the hearer, while some not

(d) The Tongue Its object is taste The several tastes are (1) sweet (2) sour, (3) stringent (4) bitter and (5) pungent Of these five some are agreeable some no.

(e) The Skin the object of which is touch

Several kinds of touch (1) light (2) heavy (3) dry (4) greasy (5) smooth (6) rough (7) cold and (8) warm

Among these some are agreeable (or pleasant) to some, to some disagreeable

A monk who is neither pleased with agreeable nor displeased with disagreeable ones of the above mentioned twenty three kinds viz five of colour two of smell three of sound five of taste and eight of touch has it must be understood reached the seventh stage

III The third formula of negligence is having no sensual or carnal attachment (असंयमः)

A monk has to give up his sensual pleasures as well as his development of intellect based on the gross material of the world of 24 articles (4 bodies, 16 senses) &c. &c. The remaining 16 articles of the world of 24 articles have been by him renounced well before entering the 4th and 5th stages. Then if there be any desire of a great man

IV The fourth pramāda' or negligence is undesirable conversation (leading to lust, passion and excitement of the mind and senses), about (1) the fair sex, (2) native or foreign countries, (3) rulers of these countries and (4) provisions (food, victuals)

V The fifth and the last 'pramāda' is 'Nidra' or sleep

Individuals (here, monks) in this stage are never fast asleep, are never languid or dull with drowsiness. They pass much of their time in religious study and meditation

There are three kinds of sleep —

(1) 'Nidrā nidrā' i.e. sleep acquiring touching of the body to arouse the person

(2) Prachalā-prachalā, i.e. sleeping while the individual is walking

(3) Styānārdhī' i.e. somnambulism

A monk in this guna-sthāna has not even one of these three kinds of Nidrā'

The appellation 'a pramāda' is assigned to this 'Guna-sthāna' because of the absence of the pramādas' in persons in that Guna-sthāna'

8th GUNA STHĀNA.

Apurva guna sthāna

The word 'apurva' means the like of which did not exist before, quite new

Thus Apurva-guna-sthāna' means the 'sthāna or abode of qualities virtues, not before existing in a monk, not before possessed by a monk

When a monk has attained some (special) virtues quite new as yet not possessed by him he is said to be in this eighth stage of development

Here he has attained the power

(1) to control or press down at will 'karmas' just when he feels them rising (This is called upahamsa-bhāva' or controlling power)

o

(2) To totally work out the 'karmas' entirely remove, destroy them (This is Kshāyika bhāva or destroying power)

In this stage samyaktva-rohanya's karma has no upāya or remedy. It has already set (which is in the seventh stage) never to rise again

It is only when this samyaktva-rohanya's karma has been removed or totally destroyed that one is said to have reached the eighth stage of development

Again in this stage 'Pratīti' is anāśa dāśa-Pratīti's 'irohanya and 'anāśya'—these two kinds of 'karmas' are in a subsiding state. Though a 'karma' is not active they have not been really destroyed eradicated (from the very root). The karma is actually being nullified

Also, Uoharva's karma has no further practice or further development through that karma is destroyed to a very great extent.

9th Guna-Sthāna (Anuvritti-bādar-guna sthāna)

'Anuvṛtita means supplementary to the preceding guna-sthāna 'Bādara means 'comprehensive'

When one (here a monk) has his thoughts or reflections guileless and purified to a very great extent, he is said to have achieved this 9th 'guna sthāna

Six prakṛtis or forms of the 'mohaniya karma' viz , (1) mirth (2) pain (3) pleasure (4) fear (5) sorrow and (6) hatred having been destroyed during the latter part of the 8th stage have no chance in this 9th stage to rise again

10th GUNA STHĀNA (Sukshma-samparāya-guna-sthāna)

During the latter part of the 9th stage anger pride and frandulence-three of the 'sanjvalana kind of Lashaya , having been totally extinct and also at the same time all the three (male female and neuter) sex passions having been out of existence this tenth guna sthāna is secured attained

In this guna sthana in the beginning greediness is latent in a very minute degree But it is totally extirpated eventually during its latter period : — about the end because of the most purified reflections or thoughts of the individual

If the individual has controlled the 'kashāya' of greediness by the will, then, after this he is ordained to reach or secure the 11th guna-sthāna, because the 11th is the guna-sthāna of those who have complete control over their 'kashāya'.

But provided he has totally worked out and destroyed the greediness he is thence to attain the 12th guna-sthāna the latter being the sthāna of those whose 'mohaniya karma' is destroyed in all its forms.

'Sukshma' means very little samparāya means confusion of the mind and senses. Thus 'sukshma samparāya guna-sthāna' means that stage, where this confusion (क्लेश in the form of greediness here) exists in the lowest degree.

11th GUNA-STHĀNA

(Upashanta moha-Guna sthāna)

In this stage of development the 'mohaniya' karma is in a controlled state. And hence the appellation. Though not active it still does exist (in some form), and its existence is due to the inability of the individual to rise to the higher stage (i.e. 12th stage).

Perchance after having had access to this 11th stage the days of the 'Indra' are numbered and he falls a prey to it & he obtains a permanent place among the 'sarvarthasiddha' demigods. Thence he is again born in the mortal human world, and then only he has the chance of attaining salvation.

12th GUNA STHĀNA (Kshina-moha-guna-sthāna)

As the very name shows, one is said to be in this stage of development when his 'mohaniya karma' is 'kshina' or totally destroyed in all its forms.

Here it is that a person, having quite freed himself from the grasp or the influence of 'rāga', 'dvesha' and all the forms of the 'mohaniya karma', gets the appellation of 'Vita raga'.

His thoughts and reflections having become guileless and purified to the highest degree he knows no difference or distinction, but sameness or identity. In him there is absence of conjectures and speculations.

At the end of this 'guna sthāna' 'Dhānūvaraniya karma' in all its five forms 'Darshanāvaraniya karma' with its six remaining forms, together with 'antarāya karma' also in its five forms have their very existence terminated. They are uprooted (from their very root) never to rise. They leave behind no seed or trace or mark for a fresh birth or growth.

13th GUNA STHĀNA.

(Sāyogi-guna-sthāna)

At this stage of development knowledge and vision of such higher degree are secured that the oby. ind. individual knows and sees before his own eyes the events of the unbourned past as well as can foresee what is to happen in the unlimited future.

This individual, be he a 'Sāmānya' level or a 'Trīthānkara' has nothing concealed to him. Facts of every thing object is unveiled before him. Thus he being omniscient even knows the doings of persons that arise in the mind of the people who he always even without being questioned solves out to the amazement of the audience. Such of his doings as are being in every way satisfactory.

As long as he lives he moves about in every nation and villages and gives before the public his opinion on religion and morality.

Yet, at this stage his four agniti ārmās have remained unobscured undestroyed. As these do not in the least affect the attributes of 'ātman' or soul they are called agniti.

This guna-sthāna is termed 'sāyogi' because as yet the existence the yoga or act of the mind speech and body.

(Ayogi-guna-sthāna)

The 14th and the last or the highest guna sthana is secured when an individual of the 13th stage of development, is just breathing his last, say just a moment before his death

As the very name of this 'guna sthana' shows, here there exists no 'yoga or activity of mind, speech and body' These activities are all totally stopped

Here again, all the four remaining 'aghāt' karmas are at an end. All other karmas too cease to exist.

Thus he is free from the hold of all karmas. abandons this frail human body and goes straight upwards to stay and live in the region of liberated or perfected living beings in one samaya or the shortest period of time imaginable

There he rests firm and fixed in eternal felicity making the place his perpetual abode never to return to this filthy immoral world of mortals
